When Mr. Austin returned home, he opened the door and went back to the kitchen to prepare his son's dinner. He noticed the note when he walked through the outer room, but did not stop to read it at the time.

A short time later, Mr. Austin said that he became worried and went back into the room and read the note, it said:

"May God forgive me for all the things I did to mankind, and may this be a lesson to everyone who thinks he is wise to more than a fool. Which I have no hate toward no one and may God forgive those who are against me, and may He bless those who live for His sake for so shall you reap what you sow for the pure in heart shall see God."

"Friends let this be a lesson to everyone young and old. May God bless you all what if you gain the world and lose your soul."

John A. Austin

The father said he went outside to look for his son, and when he could not find him, he started a search of the house and discovered the body in the parlor.

According to Mr. Austin, his son had been released last Thursday from the State Hospital at Goldsboro, where he had been placed less than a month ago.

His father said that when John came home he asked that he be allowed to remain, and not sent back to the hospital.

Mr. Austin said that since his return John had become deeply interested in the Bible, and would read the book every night, and while he did not appear depressed, he was meditative.

The father also said that his son had received his GI insurance dividend check last week, and had served overseas in the army for 29 months.

At press time funeral arrangements had not been completed, but burial will be in the National Cemetery.

Their attempts to register and vote Negroes were refused the privilege.

It was brought out that more than 100 Negroes in the eastern part of the state, because of their inability to register, the registration in any other section. This seems to be caused by the fact that the fact that the Negroes constitute a larger percentage in this section than in any other section of the state.

call for the division of the city into zones, with a single group of workers assigned to a single zone, so there will be a better coverage of the city and no duplication of effort.

Another new feature will be a door to door canvass of potential NAACP members.

In addition the executives of the branch will attempt to instill a spirit of competition into the drive to increase the interest of the workers.

While it is generally agreed that the drive of the branch has left much to be desired, the top officials of the organization refused to assign the blame for the bad showing to any person.

The biggest blow to the campaign and the morale of the workers came last Sunday, March 19, when a Mass Meeting, which the NAACP had expected to attract an overflow crowd, only drew a little over 100 spectators.

CITY OFFERS

The next general session will be held Friday night at 8 p.m. at the Memorial Auditorium with Governor Scott, Dr. R. P. Daniel, of Virginia State College, and Dr. C. V. A. Erwin, as guest speakers.

The concluding general session will be held Saturday, at 10:30 a.m., at the Greenleaf Hall, and it is this session which promises to be the biggest excitement of the convention, since the officers of the organization will be installed at this time.

With two candidates running for each office, clashes between the candidates and their supporters have already materialized, with the contest for president regarded as the hottest battle.

Voting for the candidates will begin on Friday a 10 a.m. on the ground floor of the Science Hall at Shaw University, and will end at 6 p.m.

In addition to the general sessions the teachers will hold a number of important special sessions.

At that time he charged that the leaders in the present administration, wanted to see Dr. Atkins withdraw from the race for president, because a this outspoken opposition to the new constitution at last year's convention.

In his current verbal broadside Collins makes the claim that in 1949 the tradition of the vice president being elected to the presidency, was junked when the administration became afraid that a strong candidate would be elected would be elected to the office.

"The tradition Collins referred to is peculiar to educational organizations, where the vice-president usually is allowed to become president."

In commenting on the tradition, W. L. Greene, executive secretary of the association pointed out that it had developed over a period of years, and was not included in the

Although Chicago has been stricken with a medley of attacks on Negroes who move in previously all-white neighborhoods, the judge declared the whole thing a plot thing a plot by "subversive elements" who are trying to embarrass the police department and the city administration.

The judge's speech was so "irritating" that Democratic party leaders here feared the "whitewash" might push the lush Negro vote to some other camp this November. The Chicago Sun-Times, a while daily, rapped the decision and told the judge he needed an "education" as well as the police department.

Last week, the city opened up a race relations school for the police force. Joseph Lohman, chairman of the state parole board and University of Chicago sociologist, was hired to conduct the courses, designed to "educate" local police in the correct procedure in stopping race riots before they get started.

DAWSON'S POWER STRENGTHENED

WASHINGTON (AP) — The recent confirmation of Rep. William L. Dawson as one of two official vice-chairmen of the Democratic National committee by Chairman W. M. Boyle, Jr., has served to strengthen the congressman's power in getting political appointments for well-qualified party nominees. It also clears the way for Dawson's appointment as vice-chairman of the Democratic National committee was announced Thursday in the early part of December, but last month he was invited to a public gathering as a special assistant to the chairman.

This created confusion among political circles as to whether Dawson was really a vice chairman or merely a special assistant or aide to Chairman Boyle.

In his confirmed official role as No. 1 Negro Democratic leader in the country, the first Negro chairman of the house expenditures committee finds himself in position to mete out political plums to the deserving.

Dawson has always been opposed to the supposedly powerful non-political forces such as the NAACP who have pressured for the appointment of Negroes in high political posts. During the Roosevelt administration — an administration which was characterized by the awarding of political posts on a personal rather than political basis — those non-political forces were able to secure appointments of Negroes direct from the President without regard for their political ability. Such successes, he says, are apt to be a power in politics while not being active politically.

According to informed sources, Dawson feels with his position in the Democratic party strengthened, that he is able to block non-political appointments and make recommendations for appointments to these "political active and deserving."
