

Raleigh Doctor Can't Put Business On Own Property

RALEIGH — Because residents in the area want "to be able to get some sleep" and because spokesmen for the residents said that they felt a "hazard" would be created, Dr. L. T. Delany was last week enjoined by the City Council from building a service station on property owned by him at the intersection of Tarboro and Martin Streets.

The noted physician-surgeon, who has done much to develop businesses in the Negro occupied sections of the city, had petitioned the council for permission to construct an ultra-modern filling and service station on the disputed site.

St. Ambrose Honors Drs. In Special Services, Dinner

RALEIGH, N. C. — A special appreciation and commemoration services were held for members of the medical profession at the St. Ambrose Episcopal church Sunday. Signal honor was heaped upon the medical men in attendance by the pastor Reverend George A. Eisher in a special sermon.

He lauded the services rendered humanity by men of the medical profession and commended them "for their humanitarianism in the practice of their profession" and general services to the community. The St. Ambrose Rector said: "This is the first time, that I remember, special recognition being given to the medical men of our group, and I am proud of the opportunity to do honor to some of the most important professionals in this civilization. A dinner topped the affair off following the services at the Home Eshers home."
