MONROE STREET SCHOOL NEWS

The inauguration of Dwight D. Eisenhower as new president of the United States, Tuesday, and the appearance here Friday of the Clare Tree Major Children's Theatre in "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" proved to be an enriching experience for students of Monroe Street School. Through courtesy of a local television concern, city school pupils including Monroe School were able to witness Tuesday's history-making event.

Students of grades five through eight, who saw the inauguration ceremony via TV had been studying background material leading up to the great event. They became acquainted in some instances with the various branches and departments of government as well as the secretaries who make up the president's cabinet.

Students of the seventh grade held an informal debate on whether or not the senate should confirm Charles E. Wilson as secretary of Defense, without him having to give up his holdings in General Motors. The discussion called for a study of various parts of the constitution and recent laws governing federal employees.

The "Snow White" show held in the Livingstone College auditorium, proved entertaining and informative for the large number of students attending. Many remained after the performance to meet midget Thornton, one of the dwarfs in the play, and other members of the cast. Some members of the upper grades obtained some new ideas on staging and new stage machinery for plays.

More than 500 persons came to pay honor to this man who was described by J. W. Dobbs, grand master of the Masonic Lodge as: "The most moral man the most well-read man, and the most devoted father and husband I have ever known." Trent came to Atlanta, Ga. Through his efforts the main "Y" building was erected and dedicated in 1926. He developed the Friendship and support of persons of Atlantians during his 14 years of service here.

Three minute tributes were said him by the following local leaders: Attorney A. T. Walden, J. S. Wheeler, S. W. Walker, Roger Henderson, Rev. W. Potter, minister of Shaw Temple A.M.E. Zion Church, and Dr. Rufus A. Clement, President of Atlanta University.

INTERPERSONAL INTEGRATION

ROCKY MOUNT, N. C. — During the first week of the year the local daily carried an article giving an account of alleged complaints attributed to City School Superintendent D. S. Johnson regarding the probability of this city receiving city school bus service when and if it is passed by the present state legislature. Mr. Johnson was quoted as having said: "There are no children here, except a few Negro children, who have to go a mile to school." adding, "I don't think there are any hardships being worked on anyone."

Without even considering the fact that colored high school students pack and jam two public city buses and pay their own fare every school morning and then walk two miles home in the afternoon, the local NAACP through its legal redress chairman, challenged the use of words by the school head in which he practically ignored the importance of the colored children in the matter of transportation. NAACP offered a chance for a retraction, saying it hoped the official was misquoted. However, an apology was forthcoming however.

Last week the Superintendent's office issued school paper called "Sound-Off" and a copy found its way to this desk. It is interesting to note the approach being made to what some call "integration". The photos are interspersed more or less alternately according to races and no effort is made up of teachers of both races without racial designations, except by looking at photos. It's a valiant effort worthy of encouragement.
