IN REPLY TO ACCUSATION

Hospital Denies Negligence

Hospital Staffers Answer 'No'

RALEIGH — The following statements are being made voluntarily by members of the hospital profession and other staff at St. Agnes Hospital in cooperation with this newspaper's efforts to determine whether or not negligence played a role in the recent death of the 13-year-old boy's Broken Arms. The statements are self-inculcating.

DR. JOHN T. BRISNELL SAYS: "This is to certify that at approximately 2:15 p.m., 6 February 1953, Lee Lockwood, Jr., a 13-year-old male was brought to OPH, this hospital.

"The accompanying woman, stated his mother, asserted that she had often sometimes previously and subsequently complained of pain in the left arm adjacent to the elbow. Physical examination revealed good alignment, little swelling, but point tenderness on the lateral aspect just below the olecranon joint.

"Roentgenographic studies disclosed an impacted transverse fracture of the left radius one-half (1/2) inch below the head with a slight bow."

"The patient was sent to the ward to await hospitalization for the night. She returned soon after that consultation with her husband was necessary prior completion of the above arrangements. In the meantime we Dr. R. W. McDowell, who had been called to see patient at my request, and myself had been contacted by the office concerning the patient, and mutually agreed when the mother requested the proposal that she leave the child in care of the nurse while she conferred with (Continued on page 8)

ATLANTA, Georgia — Dr. Albert E. Manley, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences of North Carolina College, Durham, has been elected president of Spelman College to succeed Dr. Florence M. Read, who will retire at the end of the present college year. Trevor Arnett, chairman of the Spelman College Board of Trustees, has announced.

Dean Manley has a broad educational background. He was graduated from Johnson C. Smith University, in 1930. He holds the Masters degree from Teachers College, Columbia University, and a doctors degree in Education conferred by Stanford University in 1946. Child Said Victim Of Negligence

JAMES A. SHEPARD
 RALEIGH — Last week the CAROLINIAN showed its readers a picture of a small boy who had had his arm broken in two places. The boy had been carried by his mother to St. Agnes Hospital for treatment. However, due to a conflict at the receiving desk, the broken bones were not set at St. Agnes and the child was taken to a private physician for treatment.

The matter was reported to the CAROLINIAN and an investigation was immediately begun. The mother and the body who accompanied her to the hospital were both interviewed. W. G. Poole, superintendent of St. Agnes Hospital at present at the hospital connected with this particular case were interviewed. The combined evidence seems to point unmistakably in one direction: the receiving desk at St. Agnes Hospital as the cause of this unpleasant controversy. As far as could be ascertained, there was no neglect, as such, or the part of the professional staff at the hospital. The boy did receive first and best treatment because the desk clerk refused to accept part of the estimated cost of the required services.

According to Mrs. J. Lockwood, mother of the injured boy, the trouble began when she took her son to St. Agnes on the afternoon of February 8 and experienced a bit of difficulty in getting X-Ray pictures made of the boy's injuries because she did not have all the money requested by the hospital. However, the pictures were made and the broken arm was immobilized with splints.

Mrs. Lockwood says she was told to bring the boy back that evening because hospitalization was necessary but at that time there was no bed available.

Returning to the hospital with her son that evening, Mrs. Lockwood says, for the first time, she (Continued on page 8)

Woman Nearly Beheaded By Crazy Knife-Killer

DURHAM — Being described as a "vicious, cold-blooded killer devoid of human emotions" is James Glover, 38-year-old local resident of 108 Husband Street, who is being sought by local police officers in connection with the brutal Saturday night knife-slaying of a woman, the mother of three small children who he reportedly "assaulted with a knife, allegedly tried to 'put him down' Glover, who is said to have been carrying on a clandestine affair with the victim, allegedly was the person who inflicted numerous knife wounds all about the body of Mrs. Maggie Tennin, of 1065 Rosedale Avenue here, during an argument between the two on Saturday night.

A neighbor, living in an apartment adjoining the one in which Mrs. Tennin and her three small children lived, called police officers after hearing what sounded like a body falling at the climax of a tussle between the victim and a man, reportedly Glover.

Arriving on the scene, officers found Mrs. Tennin's body, the head nearly severed, sprawled in a pool of blood. One of the victim's young children stood in a corner near the body sobbing hysterically. The assailant had fled.

Rumors spread throughout the neighborhood in which the victim lived tend to point to a love-affair having been going on between Glover and Mrs. Tennin. The woman was seeking to put an end to the affair when the fatality occurred, it was said.

Glover had not been apprehended at CAROLINIAN press-time, but full-scale search for him was still underway.

The crime is described as one of the most vicious in the local annals of mayhem.
