Farmers Urged To Support Flued-Cured Weed Industry

The degree to which the future of the flued-cured tobacco industry hinges on the program of Tobacco Associates depends entirely on the extent to which each and every farmer expands with full and unhesitant support of the organization.

Reinforced with the interest and support of every farmer, Tobacco Associates could become the single most important factor in expansion of our flued-cured export market.

Since formation in 1947, Tobacco Associates has been an integral part of our farm program, supplementing the price support and production adjustment measures in the comprehensive plan designed for improvement of farm economy.

But the program is not complete until every farmer has joined the organization. The program is not complete until every farmer has joined the organization.

Officials of the organization have been successful in having the program approved by farmers in 1953 referendum to insure reasonable marketing and advertising of the flued-cured product.

High Elks Man Jailed For Gambling

NEW ORLEANS — (AP) — The clubhouse of White Castle Elks Lodge 545 was raided in early July and five men were arrested for gambling.

One of those arrested confessed to running a cutting game. The exact nature of the game was being operated without the consent of the lodge and those guilty of operating the game would be punished.

The lodge was closed for a week in Louisiana. The group was known as the "White Castle Elks."

The Elks Association organization during the past eight years has devoted full time and effort toward expansion of export markets upon which farmers depend for the sale of at least one-third of every flued-cured crop.

One-third of every crop must be sold to the flued-cured market. Last year 3 percent of every crop was sold to the flued-cured market.

Officials of the organization have been successful in having the program approved by farmers in 1953 referendum to insure reasonable marketing and advertising of the flued-cured product.

Good Backgrounds Are Natural or Neutral

Of course, your subject is the most important part of a picture — but you can easily ruin the best of subjects by failing to look "behind" them in your viewfinder.

The eye can easily skip over a couple of garbage cans and a patterned fence to concentrate on a cute child, but the camera isn't so selective. It will record anything within its field of vision. So, a good background is important.

To give you a quick idea of what we mean by "good" backgrounds, let's just roughly divide them into two broad classifications: natural and neutral. A neutral background is one that makes the subject stand out merely because it is completely inconspicuous, adding nothing to the story the picture tells. Plain walls, the sky, a grassy lawn, the sweep of wide open spaces — these are the most common neutral backgrounds.

If you want to take a snapshot that will tell more of a story, try placing the subject against what we call a natural background — one that serves as a stage setting for the action being performed by the person in your picture. A good background would probably look best against the wooded bank of his favorite stream, the professor at his desk in his book-lined study. The garden would be a natural setting for the attractive young girl carrying a basket of flowers, the home workshop for the "do-it-yourself" weekend carpenter.

Whatever type of background you choose, however, remember that color contrast is important for the best results. Be sure to place light subjects against rather dark backgrounds, and vice versa. You can readily see that a dark green hedge would be a poor background choice for a dark-haired girl in a black dress — but she would certainly be a stand-out against a white garden, or a cream-colored convertible.
