METHOD — On the next fifth Sunday and each fifth Sunday service will be held at St. James A.M.E. Church at 11 o'clock. Let members and friends make this an enjoyable worship service.

Oberlin Baptist

We listened to an excellent Labor Day sermon by Dr. Grady D. Davis Sunday morning.

Dr. Davis stressed the point that people need to work and should be happy to do whatever kind of work they are fitted best to do, telling his hearers that Christ Jesus and all his followers were working men and why should we all not glory in being able to work.

It was a grand sermon and one to be remembered. Dr. Davis has had a month's vacation from his pulpit and he came back filled with vigor and increased knowledge.

Christian Tabernacle

Attended service at the Christian Church Sunday Sept. 7th if you are not in service at your church. Rev. Harvey Haywood is pastor.

School

Cary Elementary and Berry O'Kelly High School opened their doors for the 1936-37 session Wednesday night, Sept. 3rd. We trust that every child of school age will enroll the first day and continue through the whole school year.

Let us as parents and patrons do more for our children's education this year than at anytime before. Take time to visit your children's classes and cooperate more closely with our principals and teachers. Also make it a habit to be present at every P. T. A. meeting where our children are attending school. This will help our communities more than we have any idea.

All our sympathies go out to Mr. Hubert Bowe's wife, children and sister because of his illness. He has been quite sick and has been hospitalized at St. Agnes for some time. Mrs. Sarah Smith, one of our most worthy church and community workers is his sister. Others on the sick list are convalescing.

THE FEMININE FRONT (Report From South America)

By Rosalie Williams

As I write this I have been home for a week and am still talking about how good it is to be home. My experience abroad in Colombia, South America, as Fulbright Fellow was an enjoyable and professionally rewarding one and one which I shall cherish forever; but coming home was one of the best parts of it.

In the reports to the sponsoring committee and to the State Department which each participant in the group of 20 was required to make, each person I am sure praised the Seminar as highly successful and recommended its continuation as a means of producing ambassadors of good will between the United States and Colombia.

Persons with the responsibility of choosing the Seminar personnel did a wonderful job of selecting the teacher participants from all sections of the United States, from heterogeneous educational levels and from both races. That afforded a wonderful experiment in human relations because all of us got along beautifully and some lasting friendships were formed.

Several questions have been asked of me concerning the Colombian people and phases of their culture which are distinct from ours. In a short series of articles based on that trip I shall try to recall a few items which impressed most.

Colombia received its independence from Spain in 1819 but its industrial and economic development have scarcely begun. Until the invention of the airplane and the popularization of travel by air, the provinces of Colombia were literally isolated from outside contact and from each other because of the difficult mountainous terrain.

It is therefore only recent that the country as a whole has begun to emerge from a kind of medieval existence. Extreme poverty exists beside lavish living. Beggars, including ever-present children, are seen everywhere with outstretched hands. I'll never forget the spectacle of a young, sickly looking mother with four young unkempt children, one a newborn baby, sitting on a busy sidewalk begging pitifully. That was not an uncommon sight. For the most part, people just walked past her without more than a second glance.

Begging however, is said to be a racket in many instances and the foreigner is warned not to be too concerned with it. Parents are said to shamelessly send their children out to beg rather than seek employment themselves, and foreigners are asked not to give to them directly and help perpetuate this evil. Those who wish to give are urged to do so through reputable charitable organizations.

As far as food is concerned, American influence has made itself felt to the extent that one feels at home in most of the larger and better eating places in the cities. One can always get the standard bacon and eggs breakfast and on the menu can be found familiar items for lunch or dinner. The diner must be prepared to spend at least an hour and a half for lunch or dinner for South Americans are accustomed to leisurely dining with plenty of food accompanied by stimulating conversation. It therefore takes that amount of time to be served the entire meal which is never under five courses.

Regarding prices, one can buy a lavish steak dinner for about a dollar in the best eating places and for much less in the "ordinary" places. The final course in the lunch or dinner is the omnipresent cup of strong black coffee called "tinto" in Spanish which coffee connoisseurs always raved over but which left me rather cold. (Colombia is known as the country which produces the best mild coffee in the world.)

Speaking of coffee, it is the basis of Colombian economy. As the price of coffee goes, so goes the country. There is a determined effort to develop other sources of income in order to off-set this dependence on the coffee market but just now the whole country is largely dependent on this product.

An outstanding Colombian economist asked us to please tell our acquaintances here in the States, if we told them nothing else, to try to understand why the South American countries must demand a good price for a pound of coffee. It is their chief source of income and they are struggling to develop industrially. Industrial machinery which they import primarily from the United States is extremely high-priced and in order to pay for it they must receive a good price for coffee.
