average title.

According to the final baseball figures released by the CIAA's News Service here today, Bowden, who has carried a sizzling bat all spring, clouted the ball for a .539 mark, with 18 baseknocks in 34 appearances. Ranked behind him in the runnerup spot is Shaw University's shortston. William Hartsfield, who hit .467 for the year.

Cornell Gordon, freshman outfielder for the Aggies and Shaw University's Charles Devis, a catcher, and Theodore Powell, an All-CIAA flychaser, were the other three conference performers over the .460 mark. Both Gredon and Davis hit .425, while Powell clouted an even .400. Davis hit 428, while Powell clouded an even 400.

Lawson a soph righthander from Waishington, D. C., hurled a total of 48 innings for the Delaware State Hornets, giving up just 23 hits 8 carped runs, and 26 walks. His impressive ERA of 1.06 tops the conference's pitchers, while his 54 strikeouts also rates as the league's heat.

James Batten, the Aggies' senior righthander who has not lett a single game in his four-year collegiate career, was hempered by a sore arm which kept him from successfully defending his E. R. A. title. However, the lithe twirler came on late in the season to pitch 15 innings, most in relief, pilling up 28 strikouts and allowing only 1 earned for an 0.60 earned run average. Davis, the Bears' catcher, and Tracy Newman, Hampton Institute shortstop, led the league in homers, with 4 each. Howard University staley Jackson and Frank Hicks share the RBI lead with 17 runs batted in a piece.
