4-H's Given Electric Demonstration

TARBORO — The Negro 4-Hers of Edgecombe County were fortunate in getting Joseph C. Powell, VEPCO Representative from Willington, to present to them a demonstration on distribution panels, circuit breakers, and basic funda-mentals of house wiring.

The twofold purpose of the demonstration was to make the 4-Hers aware of the fact that electricity can be as safe as it is dangerous and to encourage more members to enroll in the 4-H Electric Project.

The demonstration which began on September 18, 1962 was given at the following Elementary and High Schools in the county: Willow Grave, Coker-Wimberly, Roberson, Living Hope, Phillips, Conetoe, Carver and Pottsville.

VIE FOR ALUMNI TITLE — These three young ladies, from left to right: Miss Mary F. Byrd, Mrs. Cleo T. McLeod and Miss Beattie Sampson, all of Greensboro, were finalists in the contest sponsored by the Greensboro Gate City Chapter of the A&T College General Alumni Association. Miss Byrd won out and has entered the finals of the national eliminations to determine the winner of the "Miss A&T Alumni" contest. The contest is conducted to raise funds for the college's alumni scholarship fund. At right is A. P. Bell, who was in charge of the Gate City eliminations.

COURTESY, HARRIS REA

DEAR SALLY

DEAR SALLY: Our wedding date has been set for late next month, but my fiancée and I are having a serious argument over the best man he has selected. This so-called friend of his is a loud mouth and a cad of the first degree, and I just cannot stand him. I've been after my fiancée to take back his invitation to this fellow and choose someone else for his best man, but he refuses for fear of hurting "loud mouth's" feelings. I think that my fiancée should have consulted me before inviting this fellow to be his best man, since it's my parents who are paying for the wedding and I should have something to say about who gets in the act. What do you think about this? BETTY.

DEAR BETTY: No matter who's paying the bills, it's still the groom's privilege to select whomever he wants for his best man. Why don't you try to be more gracious about this? There's really nothing he can do to spoil the "happiest day in your life."

DEAR SALLY: How about using lipstick at the table in a public eating place when the meal is over and your lips really need a repair job? There are three girls in my group who say "No," and I say it's okay. How about you, Sally? Do you retouch your lips at the table after a meal? We'll be looking for your answer to this one. QUARTETTE.

DEAR SALLY: I'm deeply in love with a wonderful girl whom I want very much to marry. Just at present, though, I have nothing to offer her, and we've agreed to wait until she finishes college in another three years (I finished college this past summer). I want to give this girl an engagement ring, but some of our friends say a three-year engagement is much too long. What's wrong with it? If we love each other, being engaged simply binds us together more firmly. How about it? C. K. T.

DEAR C. K. T.: Why be in such a big hurry to tie the girl up? Are you possibly afraid that she'll meet another fellow who could pose a threat? A girl as young as yours SHOULD be free to date others, and if the feeling between you two is really love, it will survive all other complications. I'd suggest that you wait at least another year (maybe two), and then if she still feels inclined to wear your ring, go ahead and buy her one.

DEAR SALLY: Our 14-year-old daughter has suddenly developed the clothes borrowing habit. Sometimes it's even difficult for me to recognize her when she comes home. . . . In some other girl's clothes. She has explained to me that this is what "all the girls are doing" — switching clothes. Still and all, when we go shopping together, she takes the greatest of pains in her selections of just the right dresses, skirts, blouses, belts, and the like—and then in a week or so they're missing from her closet. Is this really a common practice among girls of my daughter's age, or is something particularly wrong with my daughter and her friends? HER MOM.

DEAR MOM: This clothes trading is an adolescent hobby that is quite common and popular among girls of your daughter's age. All you can do about it is to be patient until she outgrows it. . . . and she will, I promise you.

CONFIDENTIAL TO MAC: If you have any serious doubts in your mind about marrying this woman (and it seems you do), then DON'T. If she's so incapable of containing her jealous fits now, think of what she'd be like after you were married. You seem like a gay and happy fellow now. Why not stay that way?

YOU ARE THE DETECTIVE

You place a warning hand on the shoulder of your friend, Detective Mike Ryan. "Quiet, I hear somebody coming!" Both of you stand motionless, listening to the sounds of approaching footsteps in the corridor outside the apartment. The footsteps hesitate outside the door, then you see the doorknob turning slowly, and finally the door swings quietly open, and a big, powerfully-built man steps with catlike quickness into the room. He steps back suddenly in surprise as he sees you two men watching him.

"What's this all about?" he blurts out. Then his eyes dart to the other side of the room where the man's body lies face down on the floor. "Tommy!" he cries. "Is he dead?"

"He's dead, all right," says Detective Mike Ryan. "We found him like this just a few minutes ago. We had come here to question him regarding his part in the big gambling case that's coming up before the Grand Jury next week. He was our star witness, as you doubtless know."

"I can't understand it," exclaims the big man. "I left him here just a half-hour or so ago. I'm Rocky Bellino, as you probably know. . . . shared this apartment with Tommy Thompson here. We moved in here two days ago, and were trying to keep Tommy's whereabouts secret. Afraid that some of the big gamblers' triggermen would try to get to him to keep him quiet. Tommy was pretty scared about the whole thing, and was careful not to show himself at the window or at the door when anyone knocked. I went out about a half-hour ago to buy some food, and locked the door with my key. . . . even though I was positive no one had spotted our hideout. But I guess we must have slipped up somewhere. Poor Tommy. . . . and Rocky Bellino buries his face in his hands."

"Can't see any signs of how the killer entered," remarks Detective Ryan. "The door wasn't forced open, and the window is bolted from the inside."

"I think," you say as you turn to Rocky Bellino, "that you were a little too curious. You, of course, didn't know that we had come here for a visit at this time. You just had to come back to make sure that you had done a complete job on Tommy Thompson!"

"You're crazy!" shouts Bellino. "You have no evidence to back that up!"

"Oh, but we do have evidence. . . . the flaws in your story!"

What ARE those flaws in Rocky Bellino's story?

Teachers Attend Annual African Studies Meet

CONCORD — Miss Elizabeth T. Edwards, Assistant Professor of Social Science, Barber-Scott College, attended the Annual Meeting of the African Studies Association held at the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C., October 11-13.

The central concern of the conference was to promote scholarly interest in African studies particularly south of the Sahara. Other high points of the meeting were a memorial service for one of the Association's past presidents Professor E. Franklin Frazier, former professor of sociology at Howard University, and the banquet address delivered by the Honorable G. Mennen Williams, Under-Secretary of State for African Affairs.

Miss Edwards, a 1960 graduate of the College, is in her first year as a member of the faculty. She teaches in the Social Science Department. She attended Atlanta University during the year 1960-61 and earned the masters of Art Degree from that institution. In August, 1961, during the year 1961-62, she taught at the Torrence-Lytle High School in Huntersville.

She is the Assistant Organist and Director of Youth activities in the Westminster Presbyterian Church.

By 1960, the U. S. will need seven million more acres of woodland devoted primarily to recreation or wildlife.
