No Noisy Entry At Clemson

CHARLESTON, S. C. — The influence of a Christian head of a home and his belief in the power of prayer must have been the motivating factors that caused Harvey Gantt to move into Clemson College with no doubt in his mind, nor fear in his heart.

Just before he left home Monday morning his father, Christopher, called the family together for the first of two daily devotions, held in the home and he began reading, "The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear?"

He is said to have read the entire chapter of the 27th Psalm and it was then that the family prayer was said. He sent Harvey away by telling him that God answered prayers and that he should have no fear. The elder Gantt and the 38-year-old mother said that no harm would befall their son and repeatedly said, "If God be for you, who can be against you?"

He is said to have arrived at Clemson about 1 p. m. with Attorney Perry.

SIGNED UP FOR CLASSES — The majority of Clemson college's 4,250 white students begin registering Wednesday for the second semester, made historic with the admission of Harvey Gantt.

Registration for returning students will continue through Thursday with classes to start Friday.

Gantt, 30, who enrolled without incident Monday with transfer students and freshmen, also registered for classes Wednesday morning. He was expected to spend the afternoon in the Architectural School.

There has been no harassment of Gantt, the first Negro ever to attend white public school in South Carolina, the last state in the nation.

The Attorney General reported marked gains in the extension of civil rights, particularly in voluntary compliance with court decisions in the Deep South.

Speaking before the 10th anniversary convocation of the Fund for the Republic, Kennedy contrasted gains made in the last year by President Kennedy's administration in the civil rights field with the record of the Russians.
