

The Christmas Cakes

busy, so they could not be blamed that they did not notice Hans the woodchopper's boy, standing outside looking in. There would be no Wunderkuchen at his house on Christmas Day.
No, there would be no Wunderkuchen with rich nuts and plump, juicy raisins at his house in the woods. So he played a bright little tune on his mouth harp and danced a funny little jig to keep his body warm, and tried to pretend he was having a wonderful, wonderful time, all by himself!
But it was growing dark, and the lamplighter was going his rounds, lighting the lamps on the corners. And inside the bakery shop the old baker made ready to close his doors. And he was a little lonesome, too, because here it was, the night before Christmas and he was making ready to take home a bag of his Wunderkuchen, those delicious little cake-cookies in the shape of dogs and cats and sheep.
And he had no Christmas tree upon which to hang the cookies

In that village in Bavaria, Wunderkuchen were hung upon the tree, dangling with little red string.
Then after all the gifts were opened and everybody had laughed with delight at seeing their presents, everyone was supposed to eat the Wunderkuchen. It was a good sign, everybody said, a good sign that all was well within the house for everybody to eat Wunderkuchen together on Christmas day.

HANUKKAH, THE FESTIVAL OF MANY LIGHTS

n't be Hanukkah without potato pancakes.
Why pancakes? Because that is what the Maccabee women could easily cook and serve behind the lines for their fighting men and because they are made with oil, are a reminder of the miracle of the altar light oil.

Christmas Napkin Rings

Gay napkin rings to brighten the breakfast table on Christmas morning are easy to make. For each one you'll need a 3"x4" piece of Christmas gift-wrap paper, and a Christmas seal.
All you have to do is overlap the short ends of the piece of paper, and paste them together in the center with a Christmas seal.
Roll a paper napkin and slip it into the ring. Fix one for each member of your family, and place them on the table for an extra treat on Christmas morning.
