Nevertheless, many folk still make seasonal vows - especially "New Year's resolutions."

You're RIGHT: there's nothing bad about good resolutions that are kept! Each one makes its maker a better person, and each time the world registers a slight improvement. But we're complaining about the UNKEPT resolutions, each one making its maker a bigger liar, and the world steadily worse! Let us hope that the following cases do not fall in the latter category.

NEW YEAR HAPPY

YOU ARE THE DETECTIVE

The angry-looking, red-faced investment counsellor, Jeremy Tolliver, points a quivering finger at his white-faced young secretary, Diane Simpson. "She's only been in my employ a keew, and already she's stealing from me! She opened the safe and found that eash I had in it... close to $200... she managed to do all that between the time I left this office at exactly 5:05 and returned ten minutes later! This is an outrage, and I demand that you take her in and book her at once!"

book her at once?"

The pretty young girl finally manages to speak her piece: "I agree it's an outrage "." and I mean Mr. Tolliver's false accusation! I left the office here for home not more than a minute after. I didn't even know he had any cash in his safe, and certainly I wouldn't have had the time to open the safe and search for the money, as he claims. You can check-with Jim, the elevator operator, and I'm sure he'll confirm that I rode down with him sometime between $:05 and 5:10. I had been standing on the next street corner, where you found me, at least 25 or 30 minutes waiting for my bus. I stopped to buy some lipstick after I left here, and this caused me to miss my usual bus at 5:15."

You want very much to believe the girl, beca You want very much to believe the girl, because you aren't too favorably impressed by Tolliver, his quick accusations, and his choleric temper. And so you walk outside the office and confer with Jim, the elevator operator. You are somewhat taken aback when when he tells you that Diane rode down with him at 5:15. "I happen to know that for sure," he says, "because I thought to myself that I had only another hour to work." He glances at the watch on his wrist, "Gosh, I should have been off 15 minutes ago . . it's 6:30 now!"

Two minutes later you are back in Tolliver's office and you ask him, "Are you positive you left this office at five minutes after five o'clock?"

o'clock?"

"Of course I ami"
You glance at your watch, always accurate, then at the big electric clock on the wall. Both register 6:22.

"And you're sure about the money... that it was in the safe when you left the office?"

"Certainly. Of course I didn't cheek it when I left... but I know that I put the cash into the safe at neon today and that I was in the office here all afternoon. When I prepared to leave, I just closed the door of the safe and locked it. I'm sure this unprincipled girl went to the safe as soon as I left, and ..."

"That's enough of that," yo uinterrupt Tolliver, "I think you'd better apoligize to Miss Simpson. We're going to have to look elsewhere for your thief!"

where for your thief!"
What evidence have you discovered that clears Diane Simpson?

You've discovered that the elevator operator's watch is about 10 minutes fast and alowing for this, the time of Diane's descent in the elevator, even according to the operator's statement, was actually as also claimed—within a minute or ac after 5:06—which would not have given her any time for opening the safe and extracting the money after her employer left.

DEATH FAILS TO STILL VOICE OF BLUES QUEEN DINAH
WASHINGTON
CHICAGO—(ANP)—Deeth is generally the great silencer, but not in "Blues Queen" Dinah Washingon's case.

Dinah's voice will 'continue to thrill millions through the world on record. This is possible partly because she came along at a time when the recording industry had made such great strides in its method of voice reproduction. But production aside, Dinah herself had production aside, Dinah hervelf had helped to secure her immortality with the degree of excellence she schieved as a singer. These two factors - excellence of recording reproduction and excellence of voice - will combine to keep Dinah's torch flaming for a long, long time to come, if indeed it ever dims.

The same might have been true of Bessie Smith, Dinah's great predecessor as "Queen of the Blues." Bessie, wha reigned during the 1920s and racial segregation. There is a report that she was refused admission to a Mississippi hospital because she was a Negro and, as a result, bled to 'desth.

Since Miss Smith's death, there never was an another singer "to since Miss Smith's death, there never was an another singer "to come close to her" is mastering the blues, until Dinah appeared on the jazz scene. Dinah came the closest to emulating Bessie Smith. Some said she was even greater. But on one point all seem to agree: There were no finer blues singer of their particular era then Bessie Smith and Dinah Washington.

nts of the past greatness of Bessie Smith have come down to us in legend, but there is little, if any, audible proof available. If there are any Bessie Smith records there are any Bessie Smith records on the market, I have not seen or heard them. And I have met none who has. If such records exit they must be collector's items of the rarest, most priceless type. So far all practical purpose, Bessie Smith's voice has been still forever.

Not so in the case of Dinah Washington. It is fairly safe to state that as long as records are spun, Dinah's voice will be heard. The pleading, imploring, hurt-filled, expressive voice will continue to fill the ears of disc fans. She has indeed isft a rich legacy of the blues

Her "Unforgatiable" will continue to be unforgatiable, her superbly remantic version of "Harber Lights" will continue to stir emotion.

So will her "September in the Rain," "This Bitter Earth," and sispulted her to tame to name "Evil Gai Blues" the song that catapulated her to fame to name just a few of her most memorable
