BURL ALLEN'S

Ink TONGUE

Just in case there is some day an election for the most misused public utility, I'm voting NOW for the telephone! The telephone is a unique utility in that, its services are sometimes obtained by the lone patron, and sometimes secured with assistance from special operators, both instances contributing to the gross abuse of this vital convenience.
One of the meanest phoning tricks is that of ringing until someone answers, then wordlessly hanging up! In addition to having their routines variously interrupted by the uncouth caller, some wives take it to be "his woman". Some husbands take it to be "her man". Sometimes the partners are right naturally, but many times both husband and wife are frustrated by the SAME BUSY person who happens not to be a BUSINESS person. Nevertheless, many couples are thus driven to war, and some are driven apart by these cruel pranksters.
Another infamous game is played more seldom than the silent-caller act, but is no less annoying. For example, I recently told a friend of mine not being able to contact her at a given number, and failing to get her new one from the information service.
"Yes!" she exclaimed after telling me the unadvertised number. "I had it changed and withheld after paying sixty dollars for calls I did not make — I don't know a SOUL in Chicago."
Telephone operators on duty don't talk about themselves, yet, in performing their duties, they tell us lots about themselves. I recognize three in the information service here—One, an older lady—not an old one — is very competent and very polite. A certain young lady is always pleasant and efficient. The 3rd one is something else. She declared that she had no listing for an establishment whose number I requested.
I assured her that the name of the place was correct, and that it did afford a telephone. She denied brazenly that there wasn't such a listing. Rather than dirty my mouth with her true name, I hung up, redialed information, and was blessed to contact a qualified operator, who promptly gave me the requested number.
It is difficult to find something more disgusting than a party-line telephone that is used for school work, romancing or just plain gossip; so, for the last six years, we have paid for private-line service. But, then surely we're not the only private-line victims of frequent cross-ups. Therefore, we conclude that, among telephone users, if changes for the better aren't made very soon, a telephone will become more and more like a good, bad-tasting medicine—needed, but not desired.

Let's Go Fishin'
BY BOB BREWSTER
Outdoor Editor,
Mercury Outboards

You give a lot when you give a fishing rod to a youngster for Christmas.

That's the opinion of the authorities at Mercury outboards who stress the importance of introducing fishing to boys and girls at an early age.
Of all the carefully wrapped presents under a tree, they say, none possesses the enduring, wholesome qualities of fishing tackle. That first rod and reel can spark a love for the great outdoors which will burn brightly for a lifetime.
Fishing is much more significant in the upbringing of youth than just catching fish. Literally, it provides an education in the ways of man and nature not to be found in textbooks.

Fishing molds character, and instills a sense of responsibility, sportsmanship and humility. It endows man with patience, besters confidence, and sharpens his reasoning powers.
It permits relaxation without the use of tranquilizers. It acts as an outlet for frustrations—better to become exasperated over a stubborn bass than neighbors. And one's perspective toward life always improves after a few hours on the water.

As a Christmas gift, fishing gear is highly appropriate. It doesn't lose its luster after New Year's Day, and no one outgrows a good rod and reel.
We feel that fishing is one of the best habits we can cultivate in the youth of today. So take the Mercury folks' suggestion and consider fishing equipment for the youngsters on your gift list.

Solve a Crime
BY A.C. GORDON

YOU ARE THE DETECTIVE

You and your friend, Detective Sergeant Tom Lacey, are discussing a theft case he is working on. "It's a real tough one, he tells you ruefully. "May be if I give you some of the details, you can give me a lead on it."

"Since this is one of my 'clever' days," you say with a grin, "give me the story, and I'll see what I can come up with."

"Well, as you know, Fred Harding has had a collector's coin valued at about $10,000 stolen from him, and naturally he's pretty much upset about it. He's quite a well known numismatist with a great collection of coins, and this particular coin was one he had been after for a long time and succeeded in acquiring one a couple of days ago. He's one of three brothers, and both his brothers—John and Philip—are hobbyists, too. John is a philatelist, a collector of stamps, while Philip is a bibliophile with a large collection of rare books. All three of these men have pursued their hobbies for a number of years, competing against each other in adding to their respective collections, fiercely jealous of each other, and there has been even some bad blood between them from time to time. I understand there were some heated words exchanged when Fred came up with the latest coin of his.

"As it so happens, these three all keep their collections on display in a huge showcase in the study of their father's home, the case being kept locked, and the key kept in a hidden drawer in the same room. Last night, several hours prior to the theft, another coin collector, Albert Payson, who had heard of Fred's success in obtaining this latest coin, came to see him, and Fred unlocked the case and brought the coin out for his inspection. He tried to prevail upon Fred to sell him the coin, but Fred refused to sell. And then later, during the night somebody stole into the study, took the key from its hiding place, unlocked the case, and stole the coin.
"Fred is positive it was one of his brothers who did it, with jealousy as his motive—but of course I can't rule out Albert Payson. He, along with the two brothers, knew where the key to the showcase was kept. And, incidentally, we inspected the case for fingerprints, and came up with nothing. It was wiped clean... and so we don't know whom even to begin suspecting. We have nothing at all to go on."

"I think I know whom you can begin suspecting," you say. "Who is your suspect?"

SOLUTION

Enough of having his prints developed and the case to wipe them off. In the case of the thief, the prints would be left behind. Fred's coin collector, Albert Payson, had heard of Fred's success in obtaining this latest coin, came to see him, and Fred unlocked the case and brought the coin out for his inspection. He tried to prevail upon Fred to sell him the coin, but Fred refused to sell. And then later, during the night somebody stole into the study, took the key from its hiding place, unlocked the case, and stole the coin.
