SHAW U. STUDENTS HEAR ADDRESS—Frank Belk, James May and Miss Alice Mae McDuffie talk with Dr. Herbert Collins, second from right, on his subject of "The Culturally Deprived Person." Friday, February 7, in Greenleaf Auditorium. (See story).

"The Culturally Deprived Person" Is Dr. Collins' Subject At Shaw

"The Culturally Deprived Person" was the subject of Dr. Herbert Collins' address to Shaw University students and faculty members on Friday, February 7, in Greenleaf Auditorium.

Dr. Collins stated that there are two extremes to consider in analyzing the deprivation of the Culturally Deprived Person. 1. The circumscribed; 2. The disadvantaged. He pointed out that the disadvantaged lives at the bottom of our society. He is unemployed, usually unemployable and ignorant of the issues of our times. He has a language deficiency and is detached from various strata to find himself limited. The people of this group feel completely assimilated to American culture. In the meantime they find obstacles. They experience prejudice. To realize what it means to be a Negro, Dr. Collins said, one has to be placed in a position. This group he described as over-ambitious, high strivers, aggressive. They are violent-prone, not indifferent, but they do feel frustrated. They experience anxiety, and are critical. Because of their alertness, they begin to organize, protest and assert civil rights.

Dr. Collins stated that trade unions were the earliest to organize for civil rights in the 1800's.

Whether a person starts out disadvantaged or circumscribed—one of the areas in which accomplishment takes place is in education. Teachers, he concluded, should emphasize incomparability in our culture.

Dr. Collins is professor of sociology, State College, and a part-time professor of sociology at Shaw University. His appearance was sponsored by the Shaw Chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

E. L. Barham and J. P. Broadwell Monday night that Miss Mary Williams of 530 South Bloodworth Street, visited his home and he asked her to rub his back and shoulders with some liniment, which she proceeded to do. Mr. Banks said he had $15 in his trouser pocket in paper money when the rubbing started but found to be missing when Miss Williams left. Also gone were two shirts valued at $4. He signed a warrant against the woman, charging larceny.

Boundary St., entered the boiler room, which is located in the rear of his grocery store at 508 S. Boundary, knocked a hole through a cinder block wall, made off with an undetermined amount of cigarettes, wine, a 6 transistor radio and possibly some meat.

Investigation is continuing in this case.
