Ligon Students Among Regional Winners In Scholastic Art Grants

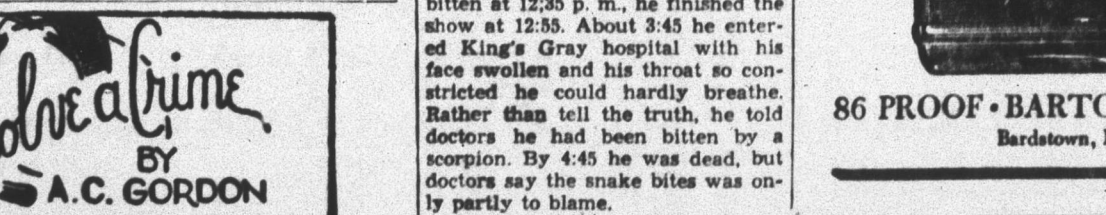

Three students from the J. W. Ligon High School were among the top winners in the regional Scholastic Art Awards, sponsored for the seventh consecutive year by WFMY-TV in Greensboro. National sponsor of the art project is Scholastic Magazines, Inc. From 3,644 entries submitted in the regional art project, a jury of six artists and art educators selected 430 pieces for regional exhibit. Out of the total picked for regional honors, 125 were judged top-rated Gold Key pieces, with the remainder winning certificates of merit. The Gold Key work represented 12 students from 42 junior and senior high schools in 15 N. C. and Va. cities.

CAROLINIAN Begins "Silver Dollar" Program

BY S. E. CLARKSON
To the readers and subscribers of this newspaper, THE CAROLINIAN is sponsoring a promotion to create additional interest in its advertising columns. Every advertiser is a member of our new Silver Dollar Promotion. Eligibility rules follow:
1. If you are a subscriber or have purchased the CAROLINIAN for this particular week.
2. If you have a receipt from one of our advertisers, showing a purchase made or a bill paid;
3. If you are a subscriber and have a receipt from one of our advertisers, you are entitled to bonus money.
4. No employee of The CAROLINIAN or any member of his or her immediate family are eligible to participate.
Should a representative from The CAROLINIAN call at your home and ask you if you have this week's CAROLINIAN and a receipt from one of our advertisers, you will be entitled to win the Silver Dollar, by producing the current copy of this newspaper.
Don't get caught without a CAROLINIAN and a receipt, because a CAROLINIAN representative may be knocking on your door. This newspaper.

BURL ALLEN'S Ink TONGUE

While a particular critic often points out maladies of society, it is not so much to expose the bad, but more to warn against what is happening to so much of the good!
For examples, certain deceptive menaces - communism, excessive taxation, extravagant foreign aid, and numerous other frauds - all preying upon minds that are either too incompetent to reason or too tired to think.
Nevertheless, after so many rash critiques, some begin to feel that, either life is a hopeless hope, or the critic is a pessimist. So, we turn optimistic, and it is astonishing that, while so much of the good is not-like the bad-misinterpreted by people too incompetent to reason or too tired to think!
For example, imagine an extensive, rainless summer; then picture the parching, thirsting consequences upon man and beast! Think of all the crops that would fall income that would not be enjoyed by farmers, processors and manufacturers, and the foods that would be needed by all! Looking at it this way, it doesn't take a philosopher to know that a rainy day is not necessarily a matter of bad weather.
Therefore, for the sake of bettering our worsening society, we suggest that optimists become half pessimists, and pessimists become half optimists, both realizing that, some things never seem as bad as they are, and some thing never are as bad as they seem.
BUT THE SNAKE DIDN'T KNOW
PORT ELIZABETH, South Africa (ANP) - Nomrati Mpindi, 17 was a self-styled sorcerer who claimed to be immune from snake bites. He used to mystify his street corner audiences by putting the heads of deadly snakes in his mouth lying down beside puff adders, cobras, ringhals, and even eating snakes - swallowing the small ones whole, and chopping up the big ones. One day a puff adder bit him in the mouth. Laughing off the snake's bite, he continued the show. He was bitten at 12:35 p. m., he finished the show at 12:55. About 3:45 he entered King's Gray hospital with his face swollen and his throat so constricted he could hardly breathe. Rather than tell the truth, he told doctors he had been bitten by a scorpion. By 4:45 he was dead, but doctors say the snake bites was only partly to blame.
