BURL ALLEN'S

Ink
TONGUE

Of all the petty, childish doings of today's adults, one of the MOST VEXING—to me—is what many of them call "saving"—especially money!
Laurence banked a thousand dollars one year while refusing to take his uninsured, ailing back to a doctor.—The cost of the immediate, emergency operation was fifteen hundred dollars! Edna has accumulated quite a bank-roll; some day she'll sponsor an impressive wedding.
But, with her tattered teeth and shabby clothes, will there ever be a proposal? Bill and Fern don't eat well; they want to launch a business that will eventually afford them fine cars, grand homes, social prominence—the better things in life.
Even if they land the business, how can it prosper, managed by undernourished bodies with tired, stagnant brains?

Yes, there are thousands of examples of this financial foolishness, but any few of them illustrate to a thinker the vast difference between stinginess and thriftiness.
Saving money and merely keeping money are not necessarily the same.
A certain fellow grew up with the correct opinion: First of all, he treats himself well—dresses well, eats well, behaves well, consequently he thinks well. He is a popular, dynamic publisher whose earnings far exceed his needs, so, he has money to save.— We all know Paul.

YOU ARE THE DETECTIVE
You have been out on some special duty all night, and are now driving home in the early morning. There's very little traffic as you cruise slowly down the one-way street, and stop your car in the middle of the block at the right side of the street in front of your apartment building. You are very weary as you enter the building and trudge up the stairs to the second floor where your rooms are. Inside you notice the clock on your bureau indicates 5:15 a. m. as you begin to remove your shoes preparatory to going to bed.

Suddenly you hear a woman's scream. You pull your shoes quickly back onto your feet and rush out into the corridor.
The door of the room across from yours is standing open, and you peer in at the Mrs. Howard, the old widow who occupies the apartment there. She is sitting upright in her bed and still screaming wildly.
She sees you and recognizes you, then exclaims, "A burglar ... he was in here! I awoke suddenly and saw him fumbling with my purse on my dresser! I screamed, and he ran out into the corridor ... towards the rear of the building! He took some of my money ... at least $50, I think!"

You immediately wheel around and run down the corridor and down the rear stairway, and through the door into the alley in back of the building—but you see no one. Then you hurry around the side of the building and arrive in front where you see a slimy-built young man setting himself on the steps at the front entrance of your apartment building. As you approach him you recognize him as Tommy Hall, the 18-year-old boy who delivers the morning newspapers in this neighborhood.
"Did you see anyone come out of this building, or around from the rear of the building within the past few minutes?" you ask him.
Tommy looks up from the newspapers he is counting and sorting.
"Why, yes. A big guy came running out from the side of the building and passed me just as I got here. He jumped into his car that was parked there across the street ... it was a big black sedan ... and he gunned it down the street like mad. I wondered about his big hurry, and then after watching him speed away for a couple of blocks I came back to the steps here and had just sat down when you came around the building. What's up?"

"Which way did he go?" you ask.
Without looking up from his work with the newspapers, Tommy waves a hand to the left, and you gaze reflectively in that direction up the street which is by now filled with early-morning traffic ... buses, delivery trucks, and business-bound passenger cars.
Then you turn back to the young newsboy. "I think maybe you and I had better have a little further discussion about this,"
you tell him.
What has made you suspicious of Tommy Hall?

SOLUTION
The man who had been peddling papers was seen near the entrance of your apartment building. Yes, Tommy admitted that he had been in the last two weeks.
