

Death Claims Man Charged With Raping Girl, 12

SHE COULD KICK HERSELF
MIAMI (ANP)—Mrs. Patricia H. Orr, 42-year-old owner of the Manager hotel in Cleveland, Ohio, was so mad here last week that she could have kicked herself. Preparing to leave Miami International airport for Cleveland, she put her two infant daughters, her parents, and her sister-in-law, aboard the plane, and then rushed back to the lobby to buy some flight insurance. Just as she was returning, the plane took off, and Mrs. Orr had to wait five hours for the next flight. The airline was kind enough to give her a room at the Inter-national hotel until the later flight.

White Man, 54, Collapses, Dies Of A Heart Attack

NEW ORLEANS (ANP)—The Grim Reaper exacted its own penalty on a 54-year-old white man who had been arrested and charged with indecent behavior and performing a crime against nature on a 12-year-old Negro girl.

The man was identified as Louis Bienvenu, who collapsed and died of a heart attack the day after he was arrested and booked on the charges.

Policemen Sgt. J. Phillips and J. Arceneux said they arrested Bienvenu last week while investigating a 1956 red, white and blue Ford automobile traveling at a slow rate of speed on Curran Road.

They said that when they approached the vehicle, the driver speeded it up and sought to elude them. They finally curbed the auto and found Bienvenu and the 12-year-old girl inside.

After an investigation, which included statements from the girl, the charges were placed against Bienvenu. The girl was turned over to the Juvenile Bureau.

However, Bienvenu never lived to stand trial on the charges of violating the young girl's chastity.

"high principles", such as you admit, do not "become mixed up" with married men.

DEAR SALLY: I did something a couple of weeks ago that I'm deeply ashamed of. I took my best girl friend's steady away from her. I didn't dream at the time that she would take it so hard, but now she's the most miserable girl in the world, and I think she's lost several pounds of weight in her grief over her lost boyfriend. He was the easiest of fellows to woo away from her—no trick at all—but now that I've got him, I don't want him anymore, not only because he's a terrible bore, but mostly because of the sorrow I've caused a real fine girl. What can I do about this? P. S.

DEAR P. S.: First, tell the boy goodbye. Then go to your girlfriend, apologize objectively for the thing you did and try to make her realize that she shouldn't be shedding so many tears over the kind of boy who could be so easily lured away from her. Maybe, if your explanation is good enough, she'll see that you really did her a big favor . . . although, of course, that wasn't your original intention, was it? I hope she'll forgive you—but don't count on it.
NORFOLK, Va. (ANP)—The Rev.

C. M. Rodgers, a victim of alcoholism for 25 years and a resident of Norfolk, like the Prodigal son came back to Norfolk three months ago to initiate a rescue mission program to help reclaim the men he hung out with in beer gardens, dives and dens. He is the son of a minister.

His brother, J. L. Rodgers, told a Norfolk audience last week that when their father died he left Rev. Rodgers not in a gutter but in a pulpit.

Rev. Rodgers has written a booklet, "How to Get Out of the Clutches of the Monster", which should be read by every Christian and alcoholic. He points out that the problem of the alcoholic is one the Christian church and alcoholic sympathizers. Hospitals and doctors have no remedy for alcoholism he told his audience.

He was particularly critical of the doctors and scientists who poke fun at Christ and claim their is no God. These critics of the Christian religion, he said, put all their hopes for alcoholics in science, but he said science is not the answer. The alcoholics need the mercy of God and the power of the Holy Spirit to be reclaimed, he said.

Rev. Rodgers, who spent several months in New York before returning to Norfolk, came back with the endorsement of a number of

DEAR SALLY

BY SALLY SHAW

DEAR SALLY: I'm a man of 24 and go with a girl of 19. She keeps complaining that I'm not demonstrative enough in the presence of others, that I don't show my affection for her by holding her hand or hugging her or uttering endearments when our friends are around. She claims she is mortified by my coolness towards her, and that this gives others the impression that I'm ashamed of her. How about this?

F. J. L.
DEAR F. J. L.: Such active demonstrations in public are by no means a proof of love. They're proof of ill-breeding and poor taste. Real proof of love between two persons lies in the treatment of each other with kindness and consideration—not in public exhibitions.

DEAR SALLY: For years, whenever we received announcements of marriages, births, anniversaries, christenings, graduations, and the like, we have always responded with nice gifts to these relatives and friends. Ordinarily I don't approve of sending announcements, since they always seem to be bids for gifts. However, about three weeks ago, when our daughter was married, we did mail out about 30 marriage announcements to some of our best friends and relatives. We did not send these out with expectation of gifts—we were just happy over our daughter's marriage and wanted all these people to know about it. However, I must confess that I am bitterly disappointed and disillusioned over the small response. To date, our daughter has received exactly three gifts from the recipients of these announcements. What is your reaction to this? H. E. E.

DEAR H. E. E.: Since you did state that you sent out these announcements for the one purpose of letting these people know the news, then why don't you consider your mission accomplished? Your admitted disappointment and disillusionment now over the "small returns" would seem to indicate that you were actually making a bid for gifts, rather than just spreading the word.

DEAR SALLY: There's a man in the office where I work whom I've idolized ever since I began working there, the best-looking, most charming, most enchanting man I've ever known. But, because he was married, I steered clear of him as best I could . . . until last week when he told me that he and his wife have separated. I've always been a girl of high principles, and I certainly have never wanted to become mixed up with a married man, but now this dream man has asked me twice to go out with him and I'm wondering if, under the present circumstances, this would be all right. UNCERTAIN.

DEAR UNCERTAIN: The very fact that you've written for advice plus the manner in which you've signed your name indicates that you know very well this is a married man you are asking about, and girls of
