Ink TONGUE

FOR HEAVEN'S SAKE
Here's the path ever upward, narrow and straight—
With torturing trials ahead—
Safely leading to New Jerusalem's gate
All souls who so faithfully tread;
Don't be tempted to travel the by-
way broad,
In the happy-go-lucky throng;
Even weaklings can walk on the downward road—
But somebody has to stay strong!

Therefore, we had better be wise!
Satan's snares are bewitching, and they who shun
Are a far-scattered, precious few!
There are many who ask that God's will be done;
Yet, His will they refuse to do!
Heaven suffers no wants—it is we
in needs—
It is we, and our Master would
That we comfort each other with Christian deeds;
Down here's where we ought to do good.

If a good reputation I build to be
My ill character's alibi, Though I might deceive many—
including me,
God knows that I'm living a lie!
If His laws I interpret in ways to shun
The disgraces of my delight,
What am I when I'm not what I really am?
For Heaven's sake, let me be right!

YOU ARE THE DETECTIVE

A young man of 18 has been brutally murdered! During the evening, at about 10 o'clock, someone had slipped into the little workshop attached to the garage in the rear yard of his home and struck Bradley Haines a fatal blow on the back of his head with a blunt instrument.

You are now in the little workroom where the tragedy occurred, and you have succeeded in finding no evidence other than some spatters of dried blood on the brand new stamp album and among the scattered stamps on the table where the young man had evidently been working that evening. His distraught parents have already told you that their son had enthusiastically embarked that very evening on the new hobby of stamp collecting. Subsequent questioning of the victim's father and a couple of neighbors turns up what could have been a motive for the crime. About a week previously, young Haines had reported to the police regarding some nefarious activities of a group of teen-aged youths, their pilfering of packages and accessories from parked automobiles and also shop-lifting. These youths had been rounded up by the police and are now out on bond pending trial. Their two leaders had been heard mouthing threats to "get" Bradley Haines.

After having these two leaders brought into headquarters, you are now questioning one of them, Tom Barlow. Big and bulky and surly, he exhibits considerable surprise when informed of the murder and the reason for his having been brought in. "I had no part in this," he blurts out. "Maybe I did say something about getting even with Haines... but that was just talk. I was in my room all evening... listening to some of my records. I'm in enough trouble without adding murder to it. Haines was a loose-lipped guy... but I wouldn't even have dreamed of killing him for putting the finger on us!"

You dismissed Barlow and call in the other suspect, Danny Dale. He brags little or no emotion when told of the crime. "So it goes," he shrugs. "But if you're thinking of pinning a murder rap on me in addition to all this other mess I'm in, you're barking up the wrong tree."

"No one is pinning anything on you," you tell him. "All we're after now is a few facts. Now, supposing you tell me how well you knew Bradley Haines."

"Hardly at all... just a sort of nodding acquaintance."

"You're sure of that?"

"Dale hesitates, moistens his lips, then blurts out, "Okay, so I did talk with him once in a while. The last time was about a week ago... I told him then he should keep his nose out of other people's business and spend more time licking his stamps, instead of running around to the police."

You lean back in your chair and meditate for a few minutes, then you say, "I'm afraid your own 'squealing' has pointed the finger of guilt at you!"

Why do you suspect Danny Dale of the crime?

SOLUTION

Bradley Haines had only embarked on the hobby of stamp collecting a few days before he was murdered. It is highly probable that he had not had time to collect many stamps. The fact that he had a stamp album and stamps on the table indicates that he had been collecting for some time. This suggests that he had been collecting stamps for some time before he was murdered. Room For One More

A cat is a delightful pet—affectionate, clean, and well-mannered. If you already own a cat or a kitten, you might well want another. The first few days when the cats are getting acquainted might take a bit of patience on your part, but soon the two should be getting along happily together. The two cats will observe each other and be influenced by each other's personality. As a result, each becomes a more interesting pet.

The Purina Pet Care Center experts offer a few hints on introducing your cats. It's best to introduce a kitten to an older cat. If the newcomer is a kitten, the older cat will assume a parental role and "take charge."

Whether the newcomer is a kitten or a mature cat, be sure all claws are clipped before you introduce the cats. If some spitting and fussing starts, don't force the cats alone together. Above all, be impartial so there will be no cause for jealousy.

Most cats in the same household ultimately become friends. In very, very rare cases, the cats prove incompatible. If this happens, you must give up the idea of owning two cats.

Contrary to popular impression, cats and dogs get along very well together. Again, be prepared for an initial period of adjustment, and always feed them separately.

her vacation, she appeared regularly once a month.

Now she enjoys a schedule which presents her at various times and on irregular dates. DID YOU KNOW?

Spices have been used as a medium of exchange. Part of the ransom of Rome to Alaric the Visigoth in 408 A.D. was 2,000 pounds of pepper, then of fabulous value.

The Dutch once burned large amounts of cloves, nutmeg and cinnamon - to keep spice prices high.

No longer are spices worth a King's ransom - although they add a wealth of flavor to food. More than 90 varieties are readily available at very low costs. And they are easier to use with the new, easy-to-open plastic covers found on McCormick spice cans.
