Tou are now interrogating a husky young man, Jim Gardner, who had been seen walking along the lakeshore with the victim earlier this afternoon. "Bob was pretty well teer off at me. "mays Gardner. "I was • out with his ex-giri friend last night—Betty Riggs. He seemed to think that I had something to de wih her giving him he gate last week, and he called me some very uncomplimentary things. That made me kind of mad, and I fired some names back at him. Then he started throwing some punches at me, and I jumped back to avoid them, tripped over a rock, and fell smack into the water. He stood there on the shore glaring down at me there in the water, then he wheeled around, and walked away. I scrambled out of the water, and sat on the edge of the dock for about 15 or 26 minutes trying to wring most of the water out of my clothes. It was geting real dark along about that time, too . . . it was about seven c'clock." "Are these the clothes you were wearing?" you ask as your cyes wander over the young man's wrinkled suit. "Tes . . I guess you can see I got a good dousing, and a real cold one it was, too." Gardner pauses as if to collect his thoughts, then continues. 'I was sort of groping my way in the dark along the path toward the road when I suddenly stumbled over something kind of soft and yielding . . . I stooped over and put my hand on it . . . it was a body! Then I lit a match, held it down mear the face, and al-most passed out when I discovered it was Bob . . . dead! I'll admit I was plenty angry with him a ha'f-hour or so before that, but then when I saw him lying there so cold and quiet . . . all that anger was wipped away, and I sure hope you catch up with the one whe did this to poor old Bob!" to poor old Bob!" You flash your lantern here and there on the ground near the visitm's body, see nothing more of interest other than the blood-sotted rock which was used by the murderer, then you turn back to Gardner. "Where did you phone me from?" "Oh . . from Bob's boat house there. There's a phone in there ...and the door was still open." And you didn't stop at the boat house after you left the dock and before you found the body here?" "No . . . it all happened just as I already told you." "Well. Fm sorry you couldn't think of a better story than the one you did tell me." you come back. "You're coming with me, and I hope this time you'll tell me the truth about this!" What has made you suspicious of Jim Gardner's story?
