

Today and Tomorrow

By FRANK P. STOCKBRIDGE

SONS
A great man's son usually has a hard time to gain recognition on his own merits. What made me think of that is the appearance in the news of three sons of former presidents.

"Jimmy" Garfield was chairman of the Resolutions Committee at the Republican National Convention. Richard Cleveland will make the nominating speech in the Democratic National Convention for Governor Ritchie of Maryland. And Archie Roosevelt is leading the fight to limit Government aid to veterans who actually suffered disability in the service. Archie has a right to take that position as he himself is a war casualty.

Abraham Lincoln's son, Robert, was president of the Pullman Company and a successful business man. General Grant's son, Frederick, had himself a distinguished military record. Mr. Taft's son, Charles, is a successful and distinguished lawyer. And "Young Teddy" Roosevelt, as Governor General of the Philippines, is making a reputation on his own.

All of these, and other famous men's sons had a hard time overcoming the idea that they were trading on their father's reputations.

Several hundred people sat in a London theatre and saw the famous Derby race reflected on a screen at it was run, on June 1. The figures were not much more than silhouettes, but it was actual television.

So far nobody can say positively when television in anything like a perfected form will be available to everybody with a radio set. Perhaps never. Many engineers think the cost will always be too high for the private home, but they admit it may become possible to throw clear-cut images, as clear as the average motion picture, on a screen in a theatre while a football game or a horse race or what not is actually going on.

A lot of bright young men are working on television, trying to discover new means of accomplishing it. Some of them will surely hit, in time.

COLOR
Human nature is peculiar, and no where more so than in exhibitions of popular misbeliefs and prejudices. Just now, for example, motorists refuse to buy yellow gasoline because of a wide-spread belief that it "gums up the motor." Now, pure gasoline comes from the still with a slight yellow tinge. To make it "water-white" it has to be bleached with sulphuric acid. That adds to the cost, but the motoring public pays it rather than buy it yellow.

Red, pink, blue, green, any other color of gasoline except yellow, is readily accepted. But because some motorist told another, who told another, that yellow "gas" was bad for the valves, filling station folks will have nothing to do with it because they can't sell it.

COLDS
Colds are caused by germs. If there was any doubt about that, the proof seems to be at hand. A medical commission which has been studying colds has found several places where nobody ever has a cold unless some outside visitor brings it in.

One of these places is the island of Spitzbergen, in the Arctic ocean. Miners who work there sleep in damp, stuffy underground quarters and are exposed in their work to temperatures below zero, in which they sweat profusely. Everybody knows there is no surer way to "catch cold" than to live and work under such conditions. But they never have colds!

Nevertheless, as long as we live here we are exposed to cold infection, it is just as well to take precautions against them.

PORK
It looks as if people were beginning to realize that it is bad business to spend the taxpayers' money for unnecessary things just to help a local Congressman get re-elected. One of the big "pork-barrel" items of governmental expenditure for years has been the building of expensive Post Offices in towns that didn't need them.

Two towns, that I know of, and perhaps others, have notified their representatives in Washington that they don't want $70,000 Post Offices. One of these is Rawlins, Wyoming, and the other is Tuxedo, N. Y. Cowboys and millionaires are in agreement on once.

J. M. Cornelius of the Sheriff's Ford section of Catawba County sold his surplus corn to hogs for 65 1-2 cents a bushel this spring. The corn cost 39 cents to produce.

IN MEMORY

"He has been with me all my life; He will not forsake me now." These words were among the last uttered by Mrs. Sama Little Hardin, and the following little poem written by a friend in memory of her is based on these words:

In childhood He was with me
As I played 'round mother's knee;
Heard each little prayer
I uttered there,
And kept from my childish heart
All care.
In girlhood He did still abide,
And ever was my daily guide;
Both night and day
He was my star,
Has ever been with me
All the way.
When womanhood brought duties
sweet
And little children played
'Round my feet,
I turned again to my
Faithful Friend,
The first and last,
Beginning and end.
And now as dark waters round me
near,
I trust Him more fully
