

Markers To Be Placed At Historic Spots

A survey of historical spots in the mountain area of North Carolina, for the purpose of erecting highway markers, will be undertaken during the next two weeks by Miss Mary-helle Delamar, acting collector for the North Carolina Hall of History, who is en route for the west on November 5. Miss Delamar is being sent by the State Historical commission, C. C. Crittenden, secretary, which is carrying on the historical marker program in co-operation with the department of conservation and development and the highway and public works commission. The legislature at its last session appropriated $5,000 a year for the present biennium for this purpose.

Miss Delamar on this trip expects to cover the following counties: Cherokee, Clay, Graham, Swain, Macon, Jackson, Haywood, Transylvania, Madison, Buncombe, Yancey, Mitchell, Avery, McDowell, Rutherford, Cleveland, Burke and Caldwell. In each county she will confer with authorities on local history.

The markers, double faced and made of aluminum, are of the same size as those of Virginia, but the lettering is larger and the design distinct. Almost one hundred legends have now been approved, and several dozen markers are actually in place. Each legend must be approved by a group of historians who do this work for the state entirely without compensation.

COUNTRY PEOPLE BEST INFORMED

A statement which will be surprising and thought-provoking to many readers is contained in the current Progressive Farmer.

"Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen are two of America's best-informed columnists. Their syndicated 'Washington Merry-Go-Round' feature appears in leading dailies all over the country. Quite recently they conducted a poll or symposium participated in by 44,000 readers, part rural and part urban, and country people everywhere ought to be interested in the following conclusions as reached by these thoughtful investigators:

"Men and women of all walks of life are thinking deeply about economic problems. Judging from our letters, people in rural sections are better informed than city dwellers."

MARTIN MOORE LOSES APPEAL

Raleigh, Nov. 6.—State Supreme court attaches said yesterday the high tribunal had signed a virtual death warrant for Martin Moore, lanky Asheville Negro, sentenced to asphyxiation for the slaying of pretty Helen Clevenger, New York university co-ed.

In declaring this morning to bear oral arguments of Moore's attorney, Sanford W. Brown of Asheville, the court limited its scope of investigation to the "revel" proper of one of the state's most sensational murder cases.

Unless the court breaks a well-established precedent, it will "accept and dismiss" the case or hold "the judgment of the lower court is affirmed."

MARJORIE K. RAWLINGS VISITS BANNER ELK

Banner Elk, Nov. 2.—Marjorie Kinman Rawlings, well known author of "South Moon Under" and "Golden Apples," novels of life in rural Florida, has been spending the month of October here in a cottage near Lees-McRae College. Mrs. Rawlings came to the mountains to begin work on a third novel.

The popular novelist praised the beauty of western North Carolina and told how she happened to come to this part of the state to write.

"I first fell in love with the mountains when I came to Blowing Rock to lecture at the School of English which was held there last summer," said Mrs. Rawlings. "Mr. Edwin Granberry and I agreed that if there was any place ideal conditions in which to write, it is North Carolina."

Mr. Granberry was also lecturing at the Blowing Rock School of English. After the close of the School of English, Mrs. Rawlings returned to her home and orange grove in Florida and began plans for her book. It was then that she decided to return to the mountains to write and chose a little cottage on Hemlock Hill in Banner Elk. There, alone except for her lively pointer, Pat, she spent the early part of the autumn hard at work on the novel. Few persons were aware that she was Marjorie Kinman Rawlings, the author.

In speaking of her newest work, Mrs. Rawlings said that it would more nearly resemble her first book, "South Moon Under," than her later one, "Golden Apples." The scene will be laid in the "scrub country" of Florida.

When asked if she had ever considered writing of the Carolina mountains, Mrs. Rawlings said she did not know enough of the country and people to write of them, but that she considered them very interesting. She said that, in her opinion, some very talented authors had written of the mountain, and mentioned the novels of Fielding Burke, author of "Call Home the Heart" and "A Stone Came Rolling." One of her favorite books, "The Erie King," by her friend, Edwin Granberry.

Mrs. Rawlings leaves this week for her home in Florida, but declared her intention of returning to North Carolina and said that she plans to build a summer home here some day.

BEST TURKEYS SHOULD BE KEPT AS BREEDERS

Big turkey prices during the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays often tempt producers to sell their best birds and keep slower developing turkeys for breeding purposes.

That's about the worst thing they could do, comments C. F. Parrish, extension poultry specialist at State College.

Now that the holiday season are not far off, he said growers should classify their birds into three groups: Breeders, market turkeys, and culls.

Although the very best birds should be saved for breeders, there will be many good birds available for marketing, and growers should make every effort to get their market birds in good condition, Parrish pointed out.

Turkey meat is considered somewhat of a luxury, he added, and therefore quality birds will command higher prices than other meat products of the same food value.

Early hatched, well developed, quick maturing pullets and young toms are given first preference. Consequently, these should be the type selection for breeders. Breeders should also be healthy, active, well balanced, and free from deformities. The market turkeys should be divided into two groups, one for Thanksgiving and one for Christmas.

In the first group place healthy birds that have large frames, are reasonably free from pin feathers, and appear ideal for marketing late in November. Confine them in a place that is not too restricted and feed them a fattening ration.

Smaller, timid, slow developing birds should be placed in the second group, where they will have a longer time to develop before being placed on the market.

FEED QUAIL AND CHECK EROSION AT SAME TIME

Every farmer knows a bobwhite quail when he sees one, but few are thoroughly familiar with its food and breeding habits, its enemies and the diseases that thin out its numbers.

George B. Becker, biologist of the soil conservation service, says that 86% of the food of the quail consists of waste grains and plant food. In providing quail and other desirable forms of wildlife with food and cover by the planting of shrubs, legumes and grasses in gullied areas, galled spots and odd corners, the farmer in co-operation with the soil conservation service and State College extension service not only helps to replenish the supply of wildlife, but controls erosion on his farm.

Cowpeas, soybeans, waste grains left after harvest, sorghums, millet, wild plum, mulberry, dewberry, ragweed, lespedeza, beggarweed, blueberries, huckleberries, dogwood, wild cherry and weeds are among the food producing plants attractive to the bobwhite quail.

Fourteen per cent of the food of the bobwhite quail consists of animal life, including grasshoppers, weevils, locusts, chinchbugs, caterpillars, squash bugs, cucumber beetles and wireworms, said Becker.

The bobwhite mates usually in May and lays from 6 to 20 eggs, which are hatched in 23 to 24 days. Soon after hatching the young are able to take care of themselves in their new environment, and if everything goes well with the first brood the female usually does not lay another set of eggs.

Among the agencies leading to decrease the bobwhite, Becker pointed out, are its predatory enemies, disease, and weather conditions.

Some of the prominent enemies of the quail are stray cats and dogs, Cooper's hawk, sharp-shinned hawk, skunk, opossum, cotton rats, snakes, ticks, robbers and red ants.

Quail are very susceptible to poultry diseases and cannot be propagated successfully near chickens. Quail disease, coccidiosis, and blackhead are among the diseases of the bobwhite.

While farmers have no control over the weather, Becker stated, they can provide the quail with food and cover, which will at the same time help to control soil erosion and build up the fertility of the soil as well as add beauty to the farm.

STATE COLLEGE ANSWERS TIMELY FARM QUESTIONS

Question: How can I inoculate soil for seeding hairy vetch this fall?

Answer: In the mountain and piedmont sections the best method is to moisten the seed with molasses and water and then mix them with from 200 to 300 pounds of soil from a field known to be inoculated. If this cannot be done a good commercial culture may be used. In the coastal plains especially on the sandier soils, it is advisable to use 200 to 300 pounds of soil from a field that is already inoculated for vetch. If this is impossible, use either of the other methods with a good application of stable manure. It sometimes takes two or three crops of vetch to establish the inoculation thoroughly and it is therefore best to start on a small scale.

Question: When should pullets be moved to winter quarters?

Answer: This transfer should be made from two to four weeks before the average pullets start to lay, or certainly by the time they are in twenty-five per cent production. This often causes a conflict, as in many cases, the hens are laying too well to be disturbed and the pullets are ready to take their place. Where the pullets are well matured, of high quality and are in 25 percent lay then they should be given the preference. If the pullets are immature and of inferior quality it would be best to sell them and keep the hens as it is a mistake to replace superior hens with immature or inferior pullets.

Question: When should skim-milk be substituted for whole milk in feeding the young calf?

Answer: The substitution should begin when the calf is four weeks old. One-half pint of the skim-milk should be substituted for whole milk at each feeding and continued until all the whole milk is replaced. At this time the calf should be getting about two quarts of skim-milk at each feeding. This amount should be gradually increased until the animal is receiving from four to five quarts. The grain feed should also be increased until the calf is eating about three pounds of grain a day at six months of age. The skim-milk is then gradually discontinued and the grain feed increased.

Eggs with dirty shells are better than clean eggs with washed shells.
