

SPORTSMAN FLIES HIGH

by Lawrence A. Keating

SEVENTH INSTALLMENT

Had a little fracas, nothing much. What do you hear from Otto—is he still hunting?

Vael nodded. "Saw in the paper yesterday a note that Otto shot a buck. A lynx-eyed chap with quiet manners and the air of a family man and home-lover, Vael tried a smoke ring. "Guess you're still on that case for Mrs. McDonald, eh? Funny they haven't got the two mugs that killed him. Prominent lawyer and all. One of them was found in an alley, you know."

As Colwell merely shrugged, the visitor hunched forward. "Say, what do you want me here for, Dan? You've something up your sleeve. I haven't much time, so spring it."

There was a short silence. "All right, I'll put it plainly for you, McDonald, you know was the boss of a snow smuggling ring."

"No, Arthur McDonald?" Vael whistled. "What do you think of that?"

"And Otto Graber was—is—mixed up in this ring. You, too, Vael. Don't lie!" he charged as the man started to retreat. "Don't let's waste words. I've got something to help you, so there's no use getting tough! You're in it, Vael—you're one of the smaller fry. Graber treats you like dirt, always has, always will."

The greying complexion of Vael's face was ample proof that he knew it to be true.

"I've seen it and tried it away for reference. Now, you aren't a bad sort. I like you a heap better than Graber. He's— Dan raised a hand to his head and ruefully rubbed a spot there still tender. "You're all right, Vael, but they're making a sucker out of you. Had it planned before McDonald kicked the ghost. Now they're making new plans and leaving you out just like before. And more than that: they'll likely make you the goat if anything goes wrong."

You must have suspected this, Vael," he appealed with a gesture. "Shucks, I'm not telling you anything, am I?"

The visitor struggled with conflicting emotions. "How do you know? You're not in the deal?"

Colwell admitted this with a shake of his head. "Happened on to it from working for the agency you and Otto run. From this McDonald case. Anyhow, I know it. And I like you, Vael. Enough to ask you here so I can give you the low-down and a warning. So you can protect yourself."

Vael considered carefully. The ash on his cigarette grew very long and finally tumbled to the carpet unheeded. "It's—true," he said with a sigh. "With McDonald gone, nobody trusts anybody else. It's dog eat dog. What are you after, Dan?"

He smiled. "A safe. Told you to bring a thousand cash, and I hope you brought it. Look here: I'm not peddling snow. Gosh, I wouldn't touch it with a ten-foot pole! But they're out to rock you and each other, if they can. Now, I don't know what you told you, how the stuff was coming in. But I've got it straight. For five hundred I'll hand it over. The half a grand looks good to me, Vael, for you fellows don't pay me much."

The grey haired, hook nosed man kept a poker face. "I'll pay, provided your information doesn't coincide with mine. I'm not paying for something I may know already."

"Of course not. Put your money on the table."

There was some hesitance about this. But at length the visitor roused himself, stood up, and produced five crisp one hundred dollar bills. He placed them on a small table which was an equal distance from the chair or each. Vael sat down again.

"Well?"

"It's coming in by truck. They're going to lift a package case off the truck."

"I know all that," Vael snapped impatiently.

"Did you know it was in a case of toys from Czecho-Slovakia?"

Vael jumped to his feet. "Toys? That straight?" He burst into a string of oaths, his hands working convulsively. "Why, the low rats told me it was brushes from Holland! I'll be— He cursed again, and began to stride up and down. "That was Mac's original scheme, I'd swear by it! Unless Mac and Graber figured—"

He halted and shot a keen look at Colwell. "What else? Which way's the truck coming?"

"Through the Anawamia Valley along the Indian Highway."

Vael's fury redoubled. "What!" he ejaculated. "Why, those dirty carps claimed it's over the Telegraph Road! Of all the double-crossers, the yellow livered double-crossers! And they think they can shake me out like that, eh? But listen, what about the truck license number? Mac had that and— You haven't it, have you, Colwell?" he wheedled.

Colwell grinned and nodded. "For five hundred."

Without hesitation Vael placed the sum on the table, making a cool thousand.

"Now feel under the table and take out those thumb tacks. It's there. Here, I will!" He rose and stepped to it. His hand went under the table.

A gun prodded his back. "Stick 'em up, you fathead!"

He stiffened, growling. Vael's laugh was bitter and taunting. "You sap! Pull me here with a fairy story, will you?" He snatched the crisp hundred dollar bills and stuffed them into a pocket. "Now back off. Careful! I want that license number, Colwell, and the boys are waiting downstairs for it. Hell, they're such dubs they couldn't get it off you! Let you go on a fake phone call from Harry Deane, eh? I'll take that license number, Colwell—and then polish you off like Otto should've a couple days ago."

While he fumbled under the table and with his other hand held a deadly bead on his victim. But Vael's triumph turned slowly to suspicion. He rumbled harder, more anxiously, seemingly unable to find what he sought.

"Drop that gun!"

It was a feminine voice from the kitchenette. At first Vael paid little heed. Dan watched hawk-like for an opening, a chance to spring on him.

With a muffled oath Vael started to crook his trigger finger. "I'll kill—"

Wham!

Gives Revolving Pension Plan a Whirl

CHELSEA, Wash.,—This town decided to try out the Townsend "Dollar Revolving" pension plan and selected C. C. Fleming, 62-year-old unemployed orchard worker, to receive and spend the $200. Photo shows Fleming receiving 200 one-dollar bills which he was to spend within a month, a 2 percent tax to be levied on each dollar transaction—and all down the line. The first Fleming cash went for a $5 permanent wave for the Mrs., the next for his weekly newspaper subscription, etc., etc. It is reported Fleming made great spending progress the first week, spending about $81 in all.

The small apartment rocked with the explosion. There was a yell of pain, the metallic tick of a gun striking the hard composition floor that helped make the place sound-proof. Vael huddled with his wrist between his knees and blood trickled down his forearm where the ripped sleeve exposed it.

Dan had out his own gun in a flash. The wielder of the weapon that had been fired did not appear. The slender, white arm withdrew into the kitchenette. Colwell backed to Vael's gun. Getting it, he kept his own levelled while he got the cartridges out of it, and tossed it to Vael.

Get out! And if you're wise you'll get away! Keep away from those buzzards waiting for you, Vael; take a train tonight, and never, never come back. Don't play with snow again, ever—that's my best advice. Change your life, man!"

Astonished that he was being permitted to leave, the visitor hurried willingly with pain to the door. Dan opened it and with an upraised foot gave impetus to Vael's flight. He closed and locked it again, quickly, then turned.

"Good work, Irita! Saved my bacon. Gonna go here to kill me. Sure of himself, too. We've got to get out quick and over to the other place. They'll be up here in ten minutes and break down the door."

"You know," he muttered reflectively, "I think Vael told the truth about it being brushes from Holland. Anyhow, I'm sure going to find out if there are any brushes coming in from Holland, and if so we'll have the whole story, time, place and all!"

Colwell sat beside the driver of the black coupe admiring her profile dimly seen. He smiled as he reflected Irita was a good sport, plucky and daring. She had to be for the game they were in. She was the kind who could hold her own in a drawing room, a hotel, or in a dangerous gamble like this—though Dan thought he preferred having her in a drawing room.

It was dark all around them, the sky a murky mass of ominous clouds, the heavy trees an efficient camouflage for the car drawn off the road with its radiator pointed to the highway. Colwell held his palm over the glowing stub of his cigar. Irita beside him seemed listening and watching intently.

"I hope they're coming." She changed posture. "I'm tired of waiting. And how do we know there's all the money in it you think? Just a guess, Dan. I almost wish I had a soft job selling hosiery over a counter, or laundry soap or something. Twenty a week might be better than trying to collect thirty-five or forty grand apiece from two men who maybe haven't that much anyhow."

Colwell grinned in the darkness and squeezed her hand on the wheel. "They've got it, all right. They didn't set up in this game just yesterday; they've made plenty. Um!" he exclaimed at a sudden twinge in his shoulder. "It takes more than three days to forget how Graber and Quillen can play!"

She turned her oval face to study him. "I'm sorry it still hurts. I'm surprised you're still alive. You're so ambitious, Dan, that it leads you from one scrape to another, doesn't it? Oh!" she broke off. "There goes a truck!"

"Not the one." He watched the big canvas covered vehicle rumble out of sight around a turn in the road, its red tail light disappearing as though wiped out by an invisible hand.

They waited. Ten minutes passed. The rumble of another heavily laden truck reached their ears and presently its white headlights swept the concrete highway. Irita looked intently at Colwell but again he shook his head.

Another, and a fourth truck passed. Suddenly through his side window, Dan saw a flash of light straight up into the black sky. It was a half mile away. Colwell leaped to the girl. "Coming now?"

She turned a switch and pressed the starter. The motor buzzed softly. Irita looked at Colwell, then back to the road. They both were tense as they listened and watched.

Again a heavy rumble came, deepening and growing louder. The white paths of its headlights grew vivid. The truck came abreast and passed them. When it was gone a half-mile Colwell patted the girl's arm. She slipped into first speed and eased the black coupe through a shallow ditch into the road. She twisted the wheel and headed after the truck.

As the roadster's lights picked it up Dan read the license number. He saw parking boxes nailed on to the extended tail gate. Irita kept the little car trailing until they rounded another curve. Then she speeded alongside the big van.

Irita began to sing happily, loudly, and to weave the car from side to side. Dan crouched out of sight on the floor. She brought the coupe around the cab of the truck and leaned out, gave a careless wave of her arm.

"Have boys! Which way Washonville?"

The coupe swerved dangerously close to the front of the truck. "Hey!" the man beside the driver yelled. "Look out there!"

Irita laughed recklessly. "Wanna play?" She swerved the car back and forth. It darted within an inch of the truck's front wheels, then corkscrewed away—only to come back again. Irita drove with one hand, continuing to wave her other out the window.

"C'mon, issa game! Which way Washonville? Hoop-pee," she cried. "C'mon, less race!"

(Continued Next Week.)

PHOSPHATE INCREASES PRODUCTIVITY OF SOIL

A 30 to 40 per cent increase in the pasture and legume growth on fields where triple superphosphate was applied last year has been reported by J. H. Fincher, Haywood county farmer.

The percentage of increase was determined by comparing these fields with adjacent land where no superphosphate was applied, he told W. A. Corpening, assistant county agent.

Although dry weather tended to check the growth of vegetation, the treated pastures provided ample grazing for his stock, and the grass was rich and succulent.

The treated clover fields not only produced more organic matter for enriching the soil when plowed under, but the plants also gathered more nitrogen from the air, he continued.

This year, Fincher plans to raise soil-depleting crops where the clover was grown last year, and a check will be made to determine the effect that triple superphosphate applications in 1936 will have on "cash crops" grown in 1937.

R. W. Shoffner, assistant district farm agent at State College, said that Fincher's results are typical of those obtained by many farmers in the Piedmont and mountain sections of the state.

However, he added, a number of the farmers did not get such good results. In some cases, this due to drought, excessively wet soils, or the lack of other elements needed for plant growth.

Applications of triple superphosphate will not correct all soil deficiencies, he explained, and if the soil on a certain farm is deficient in other elements besides phosphate, these other elements must be supplied before crops will grow satisfactorily.

Then, too, he pointed out, many farmers are finding they must apply lime with the triple superphosphate in order to get the best results.

Vilas News

Mrs. Jennie Jenkins, of Bristol, Tenn., spent the week-end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Smith.

Misses Mabel and Ruth Henson, of Bristol, are spending a few days with Miss Alma Smith. The young ladies are granddaughters of P. G. Henson, a former citizen of this county.

Miss Lucile Walker, of Newland, visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wiley Walker.

Prof. C. M. Dickson, principal of Bethel high school, spent Sunday with Dr. and Mrs. G. D. Bingham. After a few days' illness, Mrs. Alice Bingham has returned to her school at Cooke's.

Prof. and Mrs. Paul Bingham, of Blowing Rock, spent the week-end with their parents.

Mr. Joe Shipley, a resident of West Point, is spending a few days at the Shipley home. He is accompanied by Mr. Castle Page, of Blacksburg, Va. At the present Mr. Page has an important position with a dairy in Asheville.

Mrs. Ile Greene has been confined to her room with illness for several days.

YOUNG PIGS OFTEN DIE WHEN EXPOSED TO COLD

Pigs farrowed in February often die from excessive chilling that could be prevented by giving them adequate protection from cold weather.

A farmer who loses pigs in this way is really paying the price of a good farrowing house without getting its benefits, said H. W. Taylor, extension specialist at State College.

Taylor urges farmers to build a farrowing house for each brood sow. Or if the houses are available, clean and disinfect them thoroughly.

Farrowing houses are not hard to build, he said, and the cost is low, much less than the loss that may be suffered by losing pigs through exposure.

One farmer lost 15 pigs which were eaten by a cannibalistic sow, Taylor added. This could have been prevented if each pig litter had been in a separate farrowing house.

A self-feeder is another advantage in hog production, he went on. The feed is kept before the growing pigs at all times, where they can get all they need.

Pigs actually gain more weight from feed fed through a self-feeder than they do from the same amount fed in ordinary troughs, he pointed out.

Plans for building a farrowing house, plan No. 160, and plans No. 217 or No. 61, for building self-feeding feeders may be obtained free from county agents or from the agricultural editor at State College, Raleigh.

BABY CHICKS NEED CAREFUL ATTENTION

"Get your baby chicks off to a good start and you will be in a better position to make money with your poultry flock this year," said Roy S. Dearstyne, extension poultry specialist at State College.

The first step, he said, is to get only good chicks. Hatch eggs from birds of good type that are high producers. Or buy chicks from reliable hatcheries.

"Don't let low prices fool you into thinking you can get a bargain by buying cheap chicks," he warned.

Then give the chicks a chance. Feed a well balanced starter. Provide one mash hopper, five feet long, for each 100 chicks. Provide a half-gallon drinking fountain for every 50 chicks.

Carefully figure the amount of floor space in the brooding house, and do not start more than two chicks for each square foot of floor space Dearstyne cautioned.

Check brooder house temperatures at frequent intervals. More chicks have been killed by overheating than by chilling. Protect the chicks from drafts, but see that they get adequate ventilation.

Rigid sanitation will keep down disease. Do not let the chicks come in contact with anything that may have been infected by older birds. Don't drug the chicks unless an emergency arises.

If any chicks appear to be infected with disease, remove them from the brood at once. Investigate the trouble and see what can be done to eliminate it.

County farm agents and extension specialists will be glad to offer suggestions about disease control.

Your Credit Is Good at High Land Furniture Company
"Everything for the Home"
Depot St. Boone, N. C.

FOUND AT LAST
Q-623—Relief for muscular aches and pains when due to rheumatic disorders, lumbago, etc. Prescription Q-623 has helped thousands of people when many other remedies have failed. Try a bottle today. Price $1.00. We suggest you try Q-Tabs while using Q-623. Ask your druggist.
BOONE DRUG COMPANY
Boone -- North Carolina

CRAZY Water Crystals
$1.50 PACKAGE, now.....$1.00
$1.00 PACKAGE, now.....60c
BOONE DRUG CO.
The REXALL Store

CAN YOU IMAGINE!

The surprise of a news service man in Washington who when he met a boyhood friend he had not seen for years advised him to try BISMARX if he ever had stomach trouble and found that the friend worked for the producers of BISMARX and had read hundreds of similar praises!

EXPLANATION . . .
Bisma-Rex is an antacid treatment that's different from the many other ineffective treatments you have tried. It acts four ways to give you a new kind of relief from acid indigestion, heartburn and other acid stomach agonies.
Bisma-Rex neutralizes acid, relieves stomach of gas, soothes the irritated stomach membranes and aids digestion of foods that are most likely to ferment. Bisma-Rex is sold only at Rexall Drug Stores. Get a jar today at Boone Drug Store. Remember, BISMARX.

HAVE YOU THE READING HABIT?

Nothing affords more pleasure and profit than the daily visits of a good newspaper and nothing can take its place. An independent newspaper, presenting in clear and unbiased fashion a true picture of our modern times, is an unfailing source of dependable news, state, national and international.

The Greensboro Daily News, one of the South's outstanding newspapers, will completely meet your requirements, and more. It has an intensely interesting editorial section plus the best editorial features, all markets, reports and reviews; ample and late sports; features for men, women and children; the best comics daily and eight full-page Sunday comics in color. Complete Associated Press, supplemented by our private bureau service from Washington and Raleigh.

Now printed in the new and larger type, the Daily News is a greater pleasure. Adequate fast private truck service throughout the state brings you a late and complete edition, no matter where you live.

Carrier delivery anywhere at 20c per week. Mail subscriptions accepted for three, six or twelve months periods at $9 per year daily and Sunday, $7 per year daily only.

See our local distributor in your community or write direct to this office.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT
GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS
GREENSBORO, N. C.

PLAN NOW
For COLLEGE
Your Bank
Can Help

If you've made a New Year's resolution to prepare yourself for a successful career by going to college, make another resolution to gain this goal. And put this resolution into action by starting a savings plan now. A little laid aside every week amounts to quite a bit at the end of the year. Start saving now and you'll find it easy to gain the advantages of a college education.

Watauga County Bank
BOONE, N. C.
Deposits Insured Up To $5,000.00