Butter-and-Eggs, Weed
Butter-and-eggs or yellow toad-flax is a common wayside weed with yellow and orange flowers. In colonial times it was planted in gardens and sometimes was boiled with milk for a fly poisen. It is some-times called wild snandragon.

Lions Live Longer in Cages Lions bred in captivity are said to live longer, be healthier and larger, and to have finer coats and manes than wild lions, as a rule, because they are better fed, are well cared and encounter none of the hazerds of jungle life.
