NATURE LENDS AID

Crowds have been gathering about the office of the Horn gazing at the pumpkin in the window, on which are the words in bold relief, embossed by nature, "Horn of the West . . . J. L. H." During August The pumpkin which will be entered in the Blue Ridge Fair was found over at Linville, and while the natural disposition of of new paving in Watauga Couna newspaperman is to suggest that nature was doing a bit of Commissioner Paul T. Taylor rebill-posting for the Horn, fact is ported today. "Uncle Joe" Hartley had scratched the letters on the pumpkin when it was small . . . LOST IN THE FOG

A wild goose, forced down by the fog, perched on the high parapet wall at Appalachian Theatre Tuesday morning, and was viewed by many early-risers about the town . . . Lost from the flight, this feathered cruiser of the upper spaces, often isn't wild any more, and wanders around in bewilder-ment . . . In the days before rapid transportation, we have lain with boyish face upturned and watched the v-shaped formations of wild geese soaring in the high blue vault of heaven . . . forming a sort of link between us and faraway lands . . At least we'd seen something, if from afar, which was going somewhere . . . And we built fanciful dreams about the Canadian wilds and the marshes of the far Southland . . Nover dreaming we'd see the day when man would take over his airways, and fly faster and farther . . . even in a fog!

GAZEBOS GONE

Came across the word "gazebo" the other day, and had to go to the book to recall that it means "a summer house." . . The word was in common use a few years ago, and there amongst the folks who lived in the more secure economic brackets . . . The things (for the benefit of the youngsters) were small square affairs, eith-er wide open or latticed, with the coned roof supported by four pillars, usually ornately bracketed and decorated . . . Rather uncomfortable seats were provided so that one might while away his leisure protected from the sun . . . The summer house had the advantage over the porch, in that it was open from every direction, and permitted the flow of air from every direction . . . The gazebos left the scene when the auto began to take care of the spare moments in the good old summer time . . .
