Dueling May Be Amended In State

Raleigh, May 9—The House decided this afternoon it is high time to remove the statute books a mandatory death sentence for the rarest of all crimes—dueling. It amended and then passed and sent to the Senate a measure which would make the punishment for killing a person in a duel the same as the punishment for first degree murder—death unless the jury should recommend life imprisonment.

A measure to make the crime of arson—setting fire to an occupied dwelling—punishable by life imprisonment, however, ran into more opposition. The bill was approved on second reading by 33-32 and remains on the calendar for third reading consideration tomorrow. Under present law, the punishment for arson is death unless the jury should recommend life imprisonment.

At the start of the 19th week of the legislative session, the House members returned to Raleigh early to begin work on a heavy calendar. They held their first Monday afternoon meeting of the current session and recessed until 8 p. m. when the Senate also will be in action.

Also approved by the House and sent to the Senate was a measure which would permit any two or more subdivisions of the state, counties or cities, to join the creation of authorities. These authorities would have the power to build and maintain water or sewer systems. Several counties and cities in the Piedmont area are backing the legislation in the hope it will allow them to provide stand-by water supplies for use in time of water shortage.

SHEAR MAN AND BEAST

Grand Junction, Col. — Chari Charlesworth and his brother operate a barbershop here. During the spring, as soon as the shop closes for the day, they go out and shear sheep. Shearing a sheep takes only four minutes per sheep, while "shearing" a man takes twenty minutes, they say.
