Washington Comments

By BILL WHITLEY
FUTURE in the hope of making farming a more profitable business in the future, added emphasis is being put on research year by year.
During the current fiscal year, for example, the Federal government will spend almost two million dollars on agricultural research in the state of North Carolina. Most of this money, which represents a sharp increase over past years, will be spent in the form of grants to the state to be used for research in the state's experiment stations.
Last year, Sen. W. Kerr Scott asked for a complete re-appraisal of the government's agricultural research programs. It was his feeling that more emphasis should be put on tobacco, since it is a major source of revenue for the Federal government and in view of some transitions being made in the overall industry.
INCREASED. Largely as a result of Scott's interest in research, this year's fiscal expenditures for research in North Carolina have been greatly increased.
During a series of several conferences with officials of the Department of Agriculture, Scott expressed the opinion that more emphasis ought to be put on grants to the states for research work. In this way, he contended, the state experiment stations would be able to guide their research into the areas that would be most beneficial to the farmers of the state.
Last week the Department informed Scott that the research grants to North Carolina would be increased this year by $212,836.
In addition to this, an additional $89,430 will be spent by the Federal government on research projects it carries on itself in the state.
TOBACCO. Included in the programs the Federal government will carry on in the state this year is a research project "to overcome or reduce grower hazards in fine-cured tobacco by improvement of varieties and strains for desirable growth, quality and resistance to the combinations of the prevailing diseases that overlap in certain areas."
An additional $21,300 will be spent on these projects alone. There will also be sharp increases in the funds spent on pasture research and livestock production.
"In the years ahead," Scott said, "we will become more and more dependent on research for farm prosperity, and I feel that it is impossible to over-emphasize its importance."

So This Is New York

spoke a simple but touching prayer. Another at the front told of a newspaper article he had read which helped him to lead a better life. Still another arose and described the Grand Canyon and how it reminded him of the timeless, eternal power of God. The meeting was over in a few minutes. But somehow I felt more moved than I do by most sermons.

Gotham Gatherings: much talk around here about the new book on arthritis. Most folks say it's popular because doctors can do little for the disease... some wise guy here referring to the arsenic poisoning of Clara Boothe Luce suggests as a new play, "Arsenic and Old Luce"... a citizen alleged he voted Democratic so he could live like a Republican... a local taxi driver said he was for Harriman for President because "The guy's got so much money he can afford to keep his fingers out of the public pot"... overheard at a soda fountain after a man's wife had told him the milk shakes he had ordered would make him fat: "Not the way we make them," muttered the soda jerk... a woman in a plane asked that her seat be changed because she did not want to ride over the wheels.

It took the average American worker just 19 minutes to earn a pound of meat last year. In 1919 at the close of World War I the time required was 44 and one-half minutes, while in 1954 the meat average was a little more than 21 minutes. Pork now requires 15.7 minutes of working time while beef takes a little over 21 and one-half minutes. Back in 1919 pork stood at 46.3 minutes and beef took 42.5.

SELF-EMPLOYED
The United States Census Bureau recently reported that only about nineteen per cent of the workers in the United States are self-employed.

Swimming in farm ponds can be particularly hazardous, because there often is no supervision and swimmers frequently are not trained, says the National Safety Council.
