

Hundreds Join In Observance Dairy Month In North Carolina

Throughout June literally hundreds of persons in North Carolina will join hands in a common effort to call attention to this state's booming dairy industry—from the dairy cow to the chilled carton of fresh milk left on your doorstep.

To say that the North Carolina dairy industry is big business and is important to the state's economy would be true—yet it is a fact that seldom gains the attention of the average person on the street. Suffice to say that North Carolina has some 35,000 individual farm families who are in the business of keeping cows to produce milk. The gross dairy farm income in this state climbed over the billion dollar mark in 1957. Just the cows on the state's dairy farms were valued at about $38.5 million.

The average grade A dairyman in North Carolina with a 24-cow milking herd has an estimated $27,000 invested in animals and dairy equipment alone.

And there's the dairy manufacturing side of the picture. Dairy processing plants have an approximate average capital investment of $35 per quart of milk

Canada and the United States have authorized their joint air defense forces to retaliate without governmental consultation in the event of an enemy attack on the North American continent.

The agreement covers weapons that would be used instantly upon the sighting of enemy aircraft. This involves only tactical defense weapons, such as anti-aircraft and fighter interceptor planes, and not strategic nuclear bombers, which can be loosed in retaliation for an enemy attack only upon the authority of the President.
