A FAIRY TALE OF MURDER

Three Convicts And Adolph To Star In "My 3 Angels"

A paradox of justice brought about by three convicts will be revealed in the forthcoming Playcraft production of "My Three Angels."

This "fairy tale in which people commit murder as though it were 'Drop the Handkerchief,'" will initiate the Homecoming events when the curtain goes up October 16 and 17 at 8:00 p. m. in the Administration Building Auditorium.

Taking advantage of their criminal instincts, the "three angels"—Joseph (Maurice Steirwalt), Jules (Cy Triplett), and Alfred (David Porter), go about helping an honest family triumph over a despicable uncle and his weak-willed son.

The scene takes place about 1910 on a tropical island in French Guiana. The time is Christmas eve. John Kennier will play the role of Felix, an honest shopkeeper who trusts everyone—even convicts. Although his wife, Emile, (Joanne McNeil) continually disagrees with his judgment, it is quite evident that they are still very much in love.

The "angels" become quite conveniently involved in the seemingly hopeless love affair between Marie Louise (Maxine Cooper) and Paul (played by Bill Ross, director of Horn in the West).

When they discover that Marie Louise is experiencing her "first love," for a man, who in their opinion is not worthy of her, they find themselves becoming more and more enmeshed in the affairs of the family.

In order not to hurt the young lady, the "angels" tell Paul that when around Marie Louise he had better act as if he were in love with her. Strangely enough, Paul finds himself liking the situation.

Both Uncle Henry, a typical Scrooge, and the lieutenant, who arrives on the scene in the third act, will be played by Chuck Hales. A comic note will be added upon the appearance of the shrewd Mme. Parolee (Becky Hodgins).

Adolphe, the convicts' pet snake, will not be portrayed by one of the playcrafters.

This three-act comedy by Sam and Bella Spewack received favorable acknowledgment by both critics and public during its Broadway run. The play is included in both major theatre anthologies—Chapman's and the Best Plays of 1952-53.

The stage version was adapted by Hollywood, and made into the movie "We're No Angels." Aldo Ray, Peter Ustinov, and the late Humphrey Bogart played the convicts.

Stage manager, Henry Holcomb, released the following production crew heads: Prompter, Joe Blackburn; Master Electrician, Tom Vance; Property Master, Bud Hayes; Make-up, Joan Miller; Costume, Mistress, Kay Bromeling; Chief Carpenter, Ray Whitby; Pub-
