Doctor Talk

By JOHN B. REMBERT, M. D.

Heart disease today is the leading cause of death in America, and the problem of high blood pressure is one of the chief causes for heart disease. High blood pressure is most often seen in the middle-age group of people, and the resulting heart impairment accounts for a large number of deaths and much disability.

In the past and in this day of universal enlightenment many people still assume that hypertension (high blood pressure) is a natural result of aging. Getting old does not necessarily mean that the blood pressure goes up—no, the problem is not entirely due to aging.

High blood pressure can be found to follow kidney disease, as seen in Bright's Disease. At times, hypertension will be found to run in families as an hereditary factor, and in other cases blood pressure increase is seen in the overweight patient. Perhaps one of the largest groups of hypertensives in this day of universal anxiety are those who can't control their "nerves," the result is generalized spasm of the arterioles of the body and resulting increase in the blood pressure.

This increase in the blood pressure, regardless of the cause, exerts an increased work load on the musculature of the heart. The pressure must go up if the heart is to force the blood through the restricted or spastic arterioles, and this increased work causes the heart muscle to enlarge and damage to the arteries usually occurs, with the vessels becoming scarred, thickened, and inelastic (this change in the blood vessels is referred to as sclerosis or arterio-sclerosis.)

Persistent hypertension causes marked changes in the blood vessels of the brain, heart, and kidneys at an early stage—these changes then can bring on a "stroke." A brain "stroke" occurs when a small artery ruptures or becomes clotted or blocked with blood.

Symptoms of high blood pressure vary. In some, no symptoms are present at all; in others, there may be headaches, dizziness, full-feeling in the head, fatigue, or general aches and pains. If you should have any of these symptoms it does not necessarily mean that hypertension is present—you should see your family doctor. He can examine you and if the hypertension is your problem, proper treatment can be started, and if you follow your doctor's advice carefully you can certainly count on living a long-normal life.
