A critical housing shortage exists at Appalachian State Teachers College for the summer sessions of 1963, according to an announcement this week by Dr. James Stone, director of the summer sessions.

Dr. Stone issued a plea for anyone living within a 15-mile radius of Boone and having an apartment, house, trailer or summer cottage for rent to call him at the college. The telephone number is 264-8871, Extension 212. This information will be mailed by the summer sessions office to hundreds of students and teachers desiring to come to ASTC this summer.

"Last summer," Dr. Stone said, "two hundred students were unable to secure housing. And in all probability they went some place else to summer school." He said that already this year the college has re ceived more than 200 requests for summer housing and the number is expected to surpass the 500 mark.

"The college is unusual in that we receive letters of inquiry from some 40 states each year and from foreign countries. Persons are concerned about accommodations in or near Boone and would like to make arrangements prior to coming to Appalachian," he said. Dr. Stone termed the hous ing situation in Boone and Watauga county as critical. He declared that the availability of rental housing in this area is one thing which controls the development of the area. If the number of cottages increases, then the number of people liv-

State Asked To Rebuild Horn Theatre

Herman W. Wilcox, vice president of Horn in the West, headed the delegation which went to Raleigh last Tuesday to appear before a joint appropriations committee in behalf of a bill to be introduced by Representative J. E. Holshouser, Jr., aimed at getting State funds for the rebuilding of the Daniel Boone Theatre and making other necessary repairs on the Horn property. Mr. Wilcox pointed out that the theatre has gone twelve years without any major work being done on it. He says the proposal "seemed to have found favor with at least part of the Representatives." Those going to Raleigh and appearing at the hearing were Dr. D. J. Whitener, Dr. I. G. Greer, Mayor Wade E. Brown. Glenn R. Andrews, Gordon H Winkler, Grady Farthing and Jack Cobb.

Appalachian State Teachers College, as well as other institutions of higher education in the nation, faces continued pressures of increasing enrollments generated by the successive waves of population expansion and high birth rates that have followed World War II.

To try to get ready for these "waves" of students, in the spring of 1959 President W. H. Plemmons recommended to the Board of Trustees that ASTC undertake a program of long range planning to guide the fu-ture physical development and growth of the college.

City Planning and Architectural Associates of Chapel Hill spent months in studying the college growth, space needs, factors affecting future campus growth-such as topography, circulation, functional relationships, ownership of property, instructional development, residence development, service development, administration and allied phases of the expansion of the college. These plans were subject to approval by the Board of Trustees

The Appalachian campus de veloped over the years as a rather casual arrangements of buildings. One reason for the study was to give consideration to the future growth of the physical plant and make preparation for the thousands of students yet to moe

Plans have been developed to set aside certain areas of the campus for certain functions. For instance, the interior of the campus would be given over to pedestrians so that circulation (of people) arrangements could center around a campus core, and that vehicular traffic would be around on the circumference (Continued on page 7, sec.
