Save All Forage For Winter Use

The drouth in the corn and livestock areas of the midwest has made it highly important that North Carolina farmers save all the feed and forage crops possible this year. Hardly a state in the drouth area produced enough feed to winter its livestock. There will be a call upon the southeastern states to supply the stricken area with feedstuff, says P. H. Kime, associate agronomist at the N. C. experiment station. Production in North Carolina would be sufficient for ordinary conditions, he said, but the State will soon have 75,000 to 100,000 extra cattle to feed in addition to supplying what feed it can to the drouth states. At least two tons of forage will be needed for each animal. Kime recommended that even the native grasses and other low grade forage crops be saved. The farmers should be careful, however, to lay away enough seed for future use when harvesting soy beans, cowpeas and lespedeza, as there will be a heavy demand for these seed next year, he said. Cowpeas may be cut for hay some time after the peas have been picked. Soybeans planted in rows should be harvested for seed, but broadcast plantings seldom make good seed and are difficult to harvest except with a combine. Therefore, he advised cutting broadcast-planted soybeans for hay. Where lespedeza has been planted for seed, the straw may be saved for forage. Although it is not so good for hay as that cut at the proper time, it still has a higher feed value than corn stover and many of the grass hays. This is not a good practice from a soil-building standpoint, he observed, but it is justified where forage is scarce.

THE "Roanoke" The Picker That Gives Best Results At Lowest Expense

Manufactured by the

Harrington Manufacturing Company LEWISTON, NORTH CAROLINA

Ten Reasons Why the "ROANOKE" is the Machine That Meets the Farmer's Picker Requirements

- 1. Built of finest materials. 2. Most economical to operate. 3. Has fewest possible moving parts, eliminating vibration. 4. All parts easily accessible. 5. Delivers peanuts clean and unbroken. 6. Adaptable to all conditions, giving cleanest nuts. 7. Is the product of years of successful experience in building peanut pickers. 8. Picks, doesn't thresh; resulting in better grade of peanuts and finer quality hay. 9. Exclusive features of "ROANOKE" not to be had in any other machine. 10. IT IS MADE BY PEANUT MEN IN THE HEART OF THE PEANUT BELT FOR PEANUT GROWERS.

On Saturday, September 29th, we will have on demonstration at our store one of these Pickers and a Roanoke Hay Baler, which is complete with its own power. At the same time we will display our line of International Farm equipment—such as Tractors, Hay Balers, Mowers, Cultivators, Harrows and INTERNATIONAL TRUCKS. We earnestly request that every person see these labor-saving, more profitable-to-own machines on that date.
