Lamps for the Away-from-the-wall Davenport

Prentice

Business depends very much on the kind of lamps provided for reading, sewing or just.

In many living rooms, and small ones, a davenport is placed alongside a fireplace. Where there is no fireplace, an appropriate for the away-wall location is the same.

Just on the davenport in a room illustrated. But you on that one! It knows all of good lighting, having according to specifications of the Engineering Society group of lighting scientists.

You'll find that the lamp is placed at the davenport. This arrangement is possible because of the lamp and the width which allow sufficient light for the entire length of the davenport.

The excellent lighting is achieved when the shade is lifted, as in the smaller sketch. The glow from the candles throws light as down, thus eliminating glare and providing light as restful to the eyes as an elder down mattress would be to the body. Within the bowl is another bit of magic, an electric lamp, newly developed, which (because of two filaments) gives three different intensities of light at the turn of a switch. For sewing and the reading of fine print for long periods, the lights of the auxiliary candles, holding bulbs of from 40 to 60-watts, are added to that of the central bulb.

"How about using a single lamp at the end of the davenport, rather than at the back?" I hear someone ask. Well, that depends on your davenport. If it is too long the lamp standard would have to be excessively and awkwardly high to shed its light the entire length.

End table lamps can of course be used, but are not always practical for the away-from-the-wall location in a smaller room where space must be conserved.

If the davenport is of the Love Seat type, a lamp similar to the smaller one sketched, and using a 100-watt lamp, may be placed on a table behind it. This is also an approved I. E. S. Study and Reading Lamp, a multitude of lovely designs for which have been made by many manufacturers.

It is higher than table lamps you've been using, no doubt. But that's a new style note!—In the interest of eyesight preservation.

some figures show that approximately 700 white women are school in North Carolina. Sex have rules against employed married women in the same single ones are available for such a law in. Noina has been cropping out recently.

GETTING political lines are drawing up the Capital City these days need not be a political sense the forming of good the favorite candidates and the Eastern Senate classic of 1936. Probably pronounced single groups behind Governor Ehringhaus Senator Josiah W. Bailey no longer any doubt in want the Governor to oust. Other blocs are formed of Clyde R. Hoey, of Stressman R. L. Doughton and Governor A. H. (Sam) for Governor. Doug Hoey may make some shortly but Governor Grady to hold his peace until the legislative session.

LIQUOR — This ago it was a general opinion that this General would shy away from to change North Carolina but as the time for the prohibition question has come boldly into the spotlight of speculation. From all indications the Drys still have the situation well in hand but a lot of folks can't figure out just what is happening to bring out an apparent change of sentiment in some quarters. You can find plenty of officers of the law suffering since Virginia legalized liquor and Tar Heels began week-end excursions into the Old Dominion. Some of these same arms of the law privately express the hope that something will be done to liberalize the State's liquor laws at the coming session.

RIDING A WAVE — Unless some dark-horse steps out into the light, Thad Eure and LeRoy Martin will be unopposed for reelection as principal clerks of the House and Senate respectively. The speakership race is still an uncertain quantity but here's the line-up of candidates in the order that most of Capitol Hill wise ones place them according to strength: Robert Grady Johnson of Pender, first with Laurie McEachern, of Hoke, running a close second and Willie Lee Lumpkin, of Franklin running third. How accurate this estimate of strength is will be determined in the Democratic caucus on the night of January 10.

PRETTY? — Friends of Ehringhaus have spent thinking over names of members General Assembly and are smiling these days. Edentonians 50 Years Ago

Wm. James Leary, Jr.

This is another sketch in a series of write-ups about prominent Edenton people 50 years ago, taken from "Historical and Descriptive Review of the State of North Carolina," published in 1885:

William James Leary, Jr., one of those men of sense, who lend weight and standing to the community in which they are, was born January 2, 1854, in this county, five miles from Edenton. He was educated at Calvert College, Maryland, also at Lehigh University, Pennsylvania, returning to his native town where he faithfully applied himself to study law, with Captain Oct. Coke and later with Aug. M. Moore. Receiving his license in January, 1878, he commenced practice in partnership with his second preceptor with whom he remained two years; he then removed to Hyde, but in twelve months returned to Edenton, where he has ever since enjoyed a large portion of the business at this point.

Mr. Leary gives his undivided attention to his clients' interests and has become recognized as an advocate of ability and a lawyer of learning. He married a daughter of James Woodard, of Edenton, by whom he has a family of two boys. He is a vestryman of the Episcopal Church, takes an active interest in public affairs, he has been town Intendant several times and personally is an intelligent, ready and entertaining conversationalist.

New herd sires will be purchased by Catawba County Jersey breeders in a program of rebuilding the breed in that county.
