

Pleasant Vacation For Women At Short Course

College Station, Raleigh.—North Carolina farm women who attend Farm and Home Week at State College, July 27-31, will have a pleasant vacation while attending the annual short course for home demonstration club women.

In addition to the recreation, tours, and entertainment to be provided, said Miss Ruth Current, district home agent who has charge of the women's program for the week, specialists will conduct classes in those things particularly interesting to rural women.

Some of the subjects are: parent education, food preparation, nutrition, dyeing with native roots and herbs, home improvement and beautification, clothing, refinishing furniture, purchasing practices, parliamentary procedure, and wiring homes.

Besides the specialists of the State College extension service, Miss Current said, addresses and demonstrations by nationally known men and women will feature the program of women's activities. Among them are: Dr. C. P. Seward, nutritionist of New York City; Miss Margaret Furry, of the Washington office of the federal extension service; Miss Vie Dowdy, of Georgia extension service; Mrs. Evelyn Tobey, stylist in charge of clothing work at Columbia University; and Dr. C. W. Warburton, director of extension work, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Rooms for women attending Farm and Home Week will be provided in the State College dormitories, Miss Current said, and meals will be served in the college cafeteria.

Special rooms will be reserved for married couples who wish to attend the short course together. Although special features have been arranged for men and women, a large part of the program will be for both, she continued.

Lower Egg Production Expected This Summer

Egg production in North Carolina will be below normal this summer, and unless good care is given the flocks, the eggs will be of inferior quality.

To make the most of high summer prices, said Roy S. Dearstyne, head of the poultry department at State College, poultrymen will need to take special pains with their flocks and eggs.

The first step, he said, is to produce infertile eggs, as they are better for immediate consumption and they also will keep in good condition for a longer period than fertile eggs. Keep the nests clean, he added, so the eggs will not have to be cleaned before marketing. Eggs not to be consumed immediately should not be washed, as washing removes from the shells a protective substance that is needed to prevent rapid deterioration.

In hot weather, eggs should be collected several times a day and stored immediately in a cool, moist place where there is plenty of ventilation. A spring house or cellar is an ideal place.

Air in the storage room should be free from strong odors, as eggs readily absorb such odors from the atmosphere.

Candle eggs, especially in summer, to keep inferior ones off the market. Good prices can be commanded only by poultrymen who maintain a reputation for selling good eggs.

Deliveries should be made more frequently in summer than in winter, as this is necessary to supply the trade with strictly fresh eggs.

To bring high prices, eggs must look good. Customers demanding high quality eggs will not pay top prices for small, dirty, or cracked eggs, Dearstyne warned.

Specialists To Tell Of Summer Practices

Now that rains have broken drought conditions over a large portion of the State, farmers are redoubling their efforts to produce a crop this year.

Realizing this, extension specialists who are to appear on the Carolina Farm Features radio program this week will place particular emphasis on the proper procedures to be following to secure the largest possible yields. Drought seriously affected most crops and before rains fell, the agricultural situation looked gloomy.

Tobacco and cotton, the two largest cash crops in North Carolina, probably suffered the greatest setbacks. Farmers, now far behind in their cultivation of these two crops, are having to work rapidly to produce even a fair-sized crop.

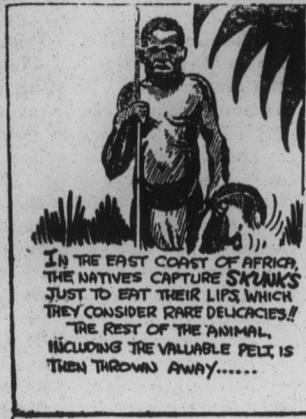

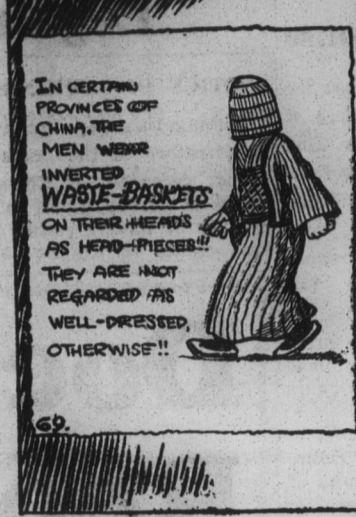

According to specialists of the Extension Service, crop conditions in the Coastal Plain section look much better than those in the Piedmont where a smaller amount of rain has fallen.

The rains have also brought out green feeds, which will help livestock and poultry raisers.

Boll Weevils Expected To Damage Cotton Crop

The 1936 cotton crop, already curtailed by dry weather, may be damaged still further this summer by heavy infestations of boll weevils.

If the remainder of the growing season is warm and damp, said C. H. Brannon, extension entomologist at State College, boll weevils will attack the cotton in great numbers.

In view of the losses already caused by dry weather, he continued, North Carolina farmers can ill afford to lose any more of their crop.

The best time to get ready for fighting weevils is before they attack the cotton plants, Brannon stated. Get the dusting machines ready, or buy new ones if necessary. Lay in a supply of calcium arsenate.

Weevils can be controlled, he pointed out, if dusting is started in time, and kept up regularly throughout the growing season.

He suggested that farmers should start examining the plants as soon as the squares begin to form. Even if no weevils are found, repeat the examination at least once a week as a measure of precaution.

Don't bother with squares that have fallen on the ground, he added, as they will not indicate the degree of infestation, if any, on the plants at the time the examination is made.

As soon as ten per cent of the squares are found to be infested, start dusting with calcium arsenate and repeat as often as necessary.

Although rotenone is good for controlling Mexican bean beetles and certain other insects, Brannon stated it will not keep boll weevils out of cotton.

Charcoal is recommended as an absorber of gases in the farm milk room.
