

Margaret Byrum Is Chosen As Model In Cotton Style Show

Chowan Girl One of 143 Representing Nine Colleges

Margaret White Byrum of Edenton, a student in Louisburg College, will be, among the 143 girls representing nine North Carolina colleges who will model clothing made by themselves in the 13th annual Cotton Style Show at State College April 25, Dean Thomas Nelson of the Textile School has announced.

All of the participating girls are making their garments with fabrics designed and woven by students in the State College Textile School. The annual Style Show was originated by Dean Nelson in 1928 to boost the use of cotton in feminine wearing apparel, and over 1,200 college girls have participated in the first 12 exhibitions.

Each girl participating in the Style Show is permitted to select her fabrics from samples submitted by the textile students. They make the garments as part of their classwork in home economics.

Girls participating in the Style Show this year represent 78 North Carolina communities and eight other states.
