

Governor Backing Drive For Cancer Funds In State

Mrs. Guy C. Hobbs Acting as Chairman In Chowan County

Over 400 volunteers of the American Cancer Society met in the executive mansion in Raleigh Friday morning to hear an address by Governor Kerr Scott, in which he heartily endorsed the cancer control work that the American Cancer Society has done in North Carolina during the past eight years.

April has been declared "Cancer Control Month" by Presidential proclamation, by Act of Congress and by resolution of the North Carolina General Assembly, the Governor said. "On this morning of the first day of Cancer Control Month," he continued, "I wanted to tell you that I stand solidly behind your purposes for the month and for the year, that I appreciate the work you have done for this State in the eight years of your organization, and that I recognize the need for continued expansion of that program."

The Governor continued, "I wish to tell you personally and the people of the State as well that as Governor, I support the work of the American Cancer Society and urge the people to join me in that support in a definite, determined way."

Governor Scott, in his address, briefly discussed the progress that had been made in cancer control in North Carolina, giving considerable credit for the creation and advancement of the program to the North Carolina Division of the American Cancer Society.

Following the Governor's address was an informal speech by E. Y. Floyd of Raleigh, director of the Plant Food Institute, member of the executive committee of the American Cancer Society's North Carolina Division, and state chairman of that organization's April fund-raising campaign.

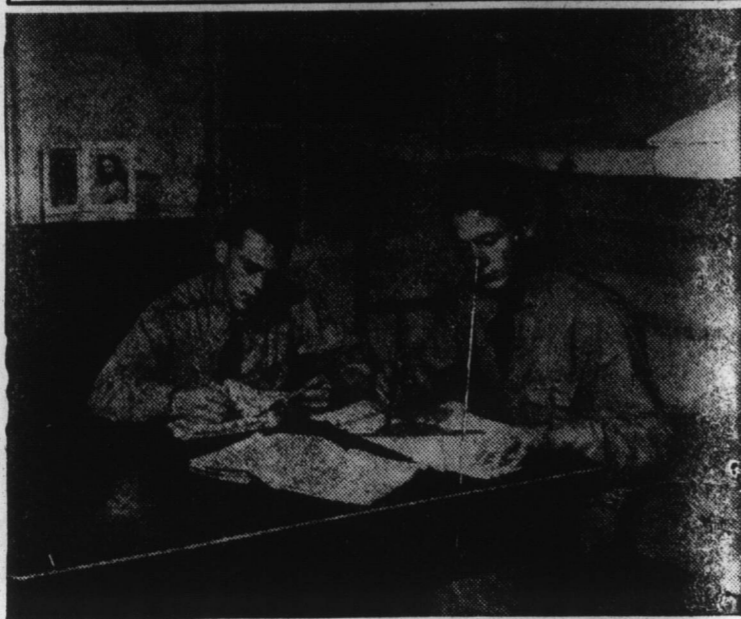

"Doctors tell us that one-half of all cancer cases can now be cured," Mr. Floyd said. "But we aren't curing nearly that percentage, largely because people still do not know the cancer symptoms or danger signals which may indicate early, curable cancer. We are prone to wait for pain, and pain is a late symptom of cancer, often a too-late symptom."

Mr. Floyd spoke briefly about the research work of the American Cancer Society, stressing the fact that definite progress has been made in the last year, much of it now improving the treatment of the disease.

Mrs. George E. Marshall of Mt. Airy, State Commander and executive vice president of the North Carolina Division of the American Cancer Society, emphasized the work of other groups interested in cancer control, among them the Medical Societies and women's clubs of the State. "The closest cooperation now exists between the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina, the State Board of Health and the American Cancer Society."

Mrs. Marshall concluded her remarks by saying, "I feel that we have built here in North Carolina a division of the American Cancer Society which has deserved the national honors it has received, and that with continued and increasing support of the people of the State, the program of education, service and research will bring more telling results in additional thousands of lives saved from this most terrible of diseases. We are prepared to expand our program to meet the needs of the people. Now we need to expand the support of the people."

Mrs. Marshall concluded, "I'm sure we will have that support. We must have it."

could not wear any make-up or comb their hair before or after they came to school and they also had to wear two different kinds of shoes. At lunchtime they were made to sing and dance in front of a group of students. Miss Walker and Miss Scott were glad to see them initiated, because their boards and rooms were cleaned for them. Bessie Tynch and Glenn Twiddy had to wash Miss Scott's board and clean up the home economics department. Marietta Perry and Dorothy Heninger washed Miss Walker's board and dusted.
