Huge Losses Seen From Hog Cholera

Estimated That Raisers Of Swine Will Lose $65,000,000

American swine raisers may lose upwards of sixty-five million dollars this year because of hog cholera, the American Foundation for Animal Health estimates.

With cholera outbreaks already occurring in some areas, the Foundation said that before the season is over the disease is expected to claim tens of thousands of victims among the record pig crop farrowed this spring. "The tragedy is that these losses need not ocur," the report said. Stressing the importance of preventive vaccination of all pigs against the disease; the bulletin suggested these special precautions:

"First, the animals should be examined by a veterinarian before they are vaccinated. Pigs suffering from which are not receiving a balanced diet she has used feed bag money to buy latent infections and parasites, or pigs may develop a fatal over-reaction to china and silver for six place settings. vaccination.

"Second, if these complicatioons are present, corrective treatment prior to vaccination can help prevent or hold down such over-reactions.'

The Foundation points out that these precautions may be as important as the vaccination itself in helping to prevent cholera losses this

She began in 1932 with a flock of less than 200 layers, and gradually expanded. At first she ran her own incubator, but this was too troublesome and now she buys all of her baby chicks already hatched.

'She started her enterprise for this year by buying 1,200 sexed pullets and 200 straight-run chicks for delivery in mid-March. She is partial toward White Leghorns because, she says, they are high egg producers.

Mrs. Hollowell is a firm believer in the pay-as-you-go policy. When the end of the month comes, she pays the feed dealer first and then settles her other bills.

Mrs. Hollowell has remodeled her home considerably in the past year at a surpirse birthday dinner served or so. She has enlarged the living room and a bedroom, put in a bath, and remodeled her kitchen. New and arger windows have been installed, the walls have been done over and the floors have been refinished.

Information obtained at home demonstration club meetings has proved useful in making these improvements in her home for convenience and attractiveness. She became interested in china and silverware following a home demonstration program on this subject. A nephew gave her a silver fork at Christmas, 1949, and a cousin later added a knife and fork. Since then,
