

RED CROSS DISTRIBUTES GAMMA GLOBULIN VALUED AT $13,000,000

1,714,996 cc. Valued at $2,615,000 Now Ready As Serum Against Effects of Paralytic Poliomyelitis

Gamma globulin having a commercial value of $13,000,000 has been distributed to State Health Departments by the American Red Cross since 1944, the organization says as the Office of Defense Mobilization officially began nationwide distribution of the miracle blood derivative.

When the Red Cross started its distribution of gamma globulin 9 years ago, it recalled that blood serum was used only for the prevention of moderation of measles. Later it was found to be effective in the treatment of infectious hepatitis and more recently as a prophylaxis against paralytic poliomyelitis. The Red Cross pointed out that all the gamma globulin that it distributed had been provided to the public without charge. It was produced at Red Cross expense from war surplus blood plasma returned to Red Cross by the armed forces following V-J Day.

The Office of Defense Mobilization, which has responsibility for the distribution of whole blood and its derivatives, is also charged with allocation of the available gamma globulin supply.

All directors of State Departments of Health have been notified by Dr. W. H. Aufranc, director of the Health Resources staff of the Office of Defense Mobilization, that they will receive allotments as needed of gamma globulin for measles and hepatitis treatment in accordance with a formula recommended by the National Research Council. Allocations of the serum for polio use are still being worked out.

Last week the Red Cross turned over to the Office of Defense Mobilization 1,714,996 cc. of gamma globulin valued at $2,615,000 ready for use as a serum against the paralytic effects of poliomyelitis. The Red Cross is now processing and bottling another 2,000,000 cc. of bulk gamma globulin which it received from the Navy and will obtain additional quantity to be processed by July 1 from current collections of blood.

Red Cross officials emphasized that the success of the effort to provide gamma globulin for prevention of polio paralysis depends upon the support of the American people in giving their blood, and also their response to the current Red Cross fund appeal for $93,000,000 through which the expanded blood program will be financed.

At current commercial prices, the 4,182,318 units (2 cc.) of gamma globulin distributed by the Red Cross to state health agencies between 1944 and December 31, 1952, is valued at $13,000,000. From the same source, the Red Cross produced 177,312 units (100 cc.) of immune serum albumin worth $7,000,000 at today's commercial prices. Of this amount 80,000 units were given to the Department of Defense at the outbreak of hostilities in Korea. This was the only supply of this shock-fighting serum immediately available at the outbreak of war in Korea. In addition, 2,172,341 units of blood plasma, valued at over $68,000,000 were distributed. The total value of plasma and derivatives made available to the public through this free distribution program was over $83,000,000.

Since 1944, gamma globulin has been distributed by the Red Cross in Southeastern states as follows: Alabama 63,400 units (2 cc.); Florida 42,800; Georgia, 87,265; Louisiana, 58,175; Mississippi, 81,050; North Carolina, 85,950; South Carolina, 68,200; and Tennessee, 69,890.
