What we still don't know about cancer

—and one of the reasons why

IN THE PAST FEW YEARS, our knowledge of the nature of cancer, and how to treat it, has grown encouragingly. Patients, who would have been considered hopeless cases even five years ago, today are being completely cured. And even those who apply for treatment too late can usually live longer—and less painfully—because of modern palliative treatment.

All the same, there have been defeats as well as victories. We do not know—to take a single example—why so many more men are now dying from cancer of the lung. In 1935—just twenty years ago—lung cancer killed 2,252 men; in 1953, some 18,500. That's a great increase—which even our expanded population, and other known factors, can't possibly account for in full.

Well, why haven't we found more of the answers to cancer? Not only because cancer is an immensely complex problem: difficult to diagnose, and difficult to treat; challenging to the best research minds.

All that is true enough. But there is another reason: we do not have enough money.

Last year your gifts to the American Cancer Society were more generous than ever before. But they were not enough.

You gave the Society almost twenty millions to fight a disease that—at present death rates—will kill twenty-three million living Americans.

Less than one dollar for each American destined to die from cancer. Much more is needed for research, for education, for service to patients. Won't you please do your part . . . now?

TEXT: "The chains of authority are always rattling."—Eff Thomas.

A small boy had the habit of coming to the dinner table with a dirty face. His mother, repeatedly, sent him back to wash before he was permitted to eat with the rest of the family. One evening, nearly losing her patience, his mother asked,

"James, why do you continue to come to the table without washing? You know I always send you back." "Well," said her son, "One time you forgot."

That which we see in this small boy is found in the grown-up. The desire to resist force and authority is a part of all of us. When it is impossible to overcome authority, we try trickery. Trickery or out-right revolt, keep the chains of authority rattling constantly.

There is an answer to this problem. It is found in education. When a man learns that it is best for him and those he loves that he act in a certain manner, he will. But he acts because he wants to, not because authority demands that he must. The small boy will scrub his face without being told, the first time a little girl attracts him. Man will wear chains, but he must be taught to put them on himself.

ATTEND FHA CONVENTION

On Saturday, April 3, Alma Hardison, Essie McClenney, Faye Twiddy, Alice Parrish and Miss Catherine Hill, advisor, accompanied by Mrs. Ben Perry, attended the State FHA

Convention in Raleigh. The meeting was held at the Memorial Auditorium and was opened with the opening ceremony. The treasurer's report was given and an entertaining program was presented by Bill Martin, Jr.

The meeting adjourned at 12:30 and an afternoon meeting was held from 1:30 to 3 o'clock. A very interesting pageant, "So Live In Faith" was presented. State Homemaker and honorary degrees were conferred on about 50 FHA members.

It is better that some should be unhappy than that none should be happy, which would be the case in a general state of equality.
