

100th Anniversary Of Ocean View Slated To Start Over Week-end

Feature Will Be Mammoth Balloon Parade Saturday

The 100th anniversary season of Ocean View at Norfolk will get under way with a mammoth free balloon parade on Saturday, May 29. The parade is just one of many free attractions scheduled throughout the entire 15-week summer season, to mark the 100th anniversary of the sale of the first lot at the Chesapeake Bay resort. The parade itself will be more than a mile long and will include 40 huge balloons in all sizes and shapes. Included among the attractions will be a 45-foot balloon caloupe which actually plays, a 40-foot life raft carrying an admiral, a wave and a sailor, a 20-foot cowboy on a 22-foot horse, a two-headed dragon, a huge elephant and rider and numerous other figures and scenes. Several bands also will march in the parade.

An aerial act on Sunday and a fireworks display on Monday, both at the Ocean View Amusement Park, will conclude the week-ends' free attractions.

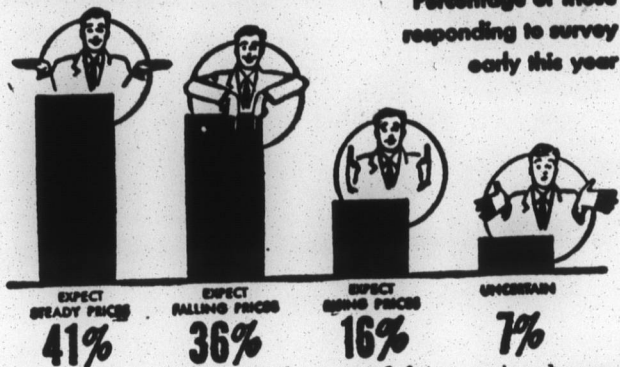

The anniversary celebration, sponsored by the Norfolk Chamber of Commerce and Ocean View organizations, is being conducted by a committee headed by Frank Wertz. This committee has arranged a complete program of daily, mid-week and week-end events, including square dances, bathing beauty contests, band concerts, free aerial acts and fishing and other athletic contests. A complete list of these events will be listed later.

The present Ocean View, dotted with homes, cottages, hotels, apartment houses and motels, is a far cry from the Ocean View which existed at the time of the old Ocean View Hotel where women rocked contentedly on the veranda as the menfolk fished and the children played, well-covered on the sand.

But the quiet Bay water beyond the white sand has attracted more fishermen and bathers each year, and the croakers and spot still offer sportsmen an easy catch.

The View was formerly out of the city limits, but the city swelled right to the shores of the bay. Ocean View visitors may enjoy the night life of Virginia's largest city, its theaters,

WHAT CONSUMERS EXPECT AS TO PRICE CHANGES

What consumers anticipate in the way of future price changes—regardless of whether such anticipations eventually prove right or wrong—has an important influence on their current economic decisions. It is significant that a recent Federal Reserve Board survey shows that, in early 1954, the largest group of consumers expect prices to remain steady. As always, a certain number expect prices to fall and others expect prices to rise, but there is not a majority in either direction. This is not too much different from the situation a year ago, but it is vastly different from the pattern in early 1951 when 77% of consumers expected prices to rise and early in 1952 when 53% expected them to rise.

About 41 per cent of the consumers now expect prices to remain substantially unchanged during the rest of this year. These people are not likely to engage in panic spending in order to buy before prices increase, but neither are they likely to hold off in anticipation of lower prices.

A somewhat smaller number—36 per cent—expect falling prices. These consumers may postpone some types of buying, thereby leaving a backlog of needs and desires in the future. To some extent, the hoped-for lower prices have already materialized.

Another 16 per cent of all consumer units in early 1954 expect rising prices. (An additional 7 per cent were uncertain as to what to expect). This is smaller than the corresponding percentage in any year since the beginning of the Korean War.

In summary, the trend suggests that while consumers, in their present mood, are not likely to be scared into buying in the near future, they can be enticed into buying.

restaurants and shopping districts, and still take in the sun and the salt water at one of the most charming beach resorts.

The horse and buggy, and later the stage service, steam train and open trolleys are gone, but the rest and relaxation, or fun and entertainment are there in bigger proportions than ever.
