

National Employ Physically Handicapped Week Being Observed Week Of Oct. 4-10

Mrs. Corie B. White, Local Manager of North Carolina Employment Service, Urges Use of Services Provided In Edenton Office

National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week is being observed throughout the nation this week of October 4-10, for the ninth consecutive year. President Eisenhower and Governors of all States, by proclamation, has set aside the week to emphasize and highlight the abilities of the physically handicapped when properly trained and placed in suitable employment.

The North Carolina Employment Service, according to Mrs. Corie B. White, manager of the Edenton office, is engaged in a year-round program to promote increased employment of physically handicapped workers.

Mrs. White pointed out that a physical handicap should not be a barrier to securing employment, but that individuals should be considered for jobs solely on the basis of their training, skill, and ability.

"We need to use the talents of the disabled," Mrs. White declared. "We need them as active, productive citizens. The privilege of each person to go forth to his chosen work each day is the greatest gift that free men enjoy in a democratic society."

The principal objective of NEPH Week are to promote a better understanding of the outstanding performance of physically handicapped workers when properly placed and to inform the handicapped themselves of rehabilitation and training services available to them and encourage them to use these services.

Mrs. White stated that jobs for the handicapped are a daily objective of each member of her staff during the entire year. "The physically handicap worker is at your service, ready, willing and able to do a job for you. Mr. Employer," stated Mrs. White. "Disability does not destroy ability."

"All employers are urged to do their part in helping these people to earn a livelihood. Call your local Employment Service Office and list your openings. All handicap applicants are urged to register with the local office for assistance."

shortly before the New Congress convenes in January.

The Attorney-General's Committee is one of several named by the Eisenhower Administration to review major legislative matters and to suggest policies to guide the nation.

The Anti-Trust inquiry sprang, in part, from repeated charges in Congress that monopoly is growing. While charges have been numerous, little legislation has been passed. An ambitious Anti-Trust investigation was conducted early in the New Deal Regime by the Temporary National Economic Committee (TNEC), but virtually no legislation resulted.

A House investigating sub-committee conducted a lengthy probe more recently, but could agree upon few proposed changes in Anti-Trust Laws. An apparent reason for lack of legislation is that investigation frequently dispels numerous myths about growth of monopoly. Often when the demise of small business is proclaimed, the number of small firms and new businesses stages a marked increase. While there is a great deal of talk about mergers, the net number is relatively small.

Competition is generally recognized as the basic regulating and directing force in a free economy.

American Business believes in free and open competition that is effective in all lines of commerce and favors the necessary measures to preserve its full vigor.

Business recognizes that federal Anti-Trust legislation is necessary to maintain effective competition.

It is hoped, therefore, by industry, that the current study will produce a sound and realistic set of legal and economic standards for Anti-Trust Law enforcement.

By Walter Chamblin, Jr.

A child is convinced he is treated unfairly when punished for doing something he didn't know was wrong. Industry has every right to feel the same way at times with respect to enforcement of the Anti-Trust Laws. It frequently is impossible to know what is right and what is wrong.

Attempts are made to punish business for being big . . . Yet when an emergency arises which requires quick development of an atomic bomb it is found that Big Business is necessary to do part of the job.

This situation led one member of Congress to comment that the Anti-Trust Laws should be flexible, like an accordion . . . so they could be contracted or expanded as desired.

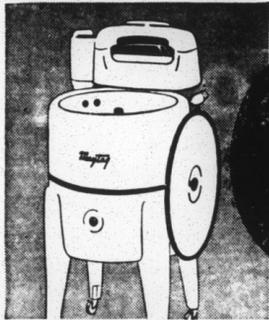

Anyhow, despite more than 60 years' enforcement of the basic Anti-Trust Statute, business men have not as yet been provided with workable guides for judging, with any degree of certainty, the legality of normal business activity.

Administrative agencies and the courts have interpreted and applied the statutes beyond the scope of the original intent of Congress.

This has created inconsistencies and uncertainties which impede business planning for the future and which sometimes makes business reluctant to undertake expansion programs to provide needed products and jobs.

The Eisenhower Administration is trying to do something about this situation . . . And, as a result, Anti-Trust Law revision is certain to be a major subject for active consideration by the next Congress.

Debate will be sparked by a report of a special Anti-Trust Committee now working under the leadership of Attorney-General Herbert Brownell. A lengthy report will be submitted
