

Census Enumerators Take Training Course

Every Farm In County Will Be Contacted For Information

Enumerators for the 1954 census of agriculture began an intensive training course Tuesday of this week in preparation for the start of the census on November 1, it is announced by Field Supervisor Randolph Williams.

The training sessions will be held at the Agriculture Building in Hertford, N. C., and will be conducted by Crew Leader Mrs. Barbara W. Rose. Mrs. Rose recently attended a five day training conference on census methods.

The enumerator training course will cover the various forms and reports to be used, census taking methods and practice interviews in the classroom. The prospective enumerators will conduct actual interviews as part of their training.

Following this training course the enumerators will start visiting November 1 every farm in the county. The information the enumerators receive is confidential. No one will have access to this information except Bureau of the Census personnel. This is held in absolute confidence under federal law. Information cannot be used for investigation, taxation or regulation.

MAGIC STRESSES HIGHWAY SAFETY

Flowers from thin air is just one of many tricks Sergeant Carl Pike used during his "Safety Magic" show to highlight his talk on traffic and safety and good safety habits Monday in both the Negro High School and Elementary School auditorium. Currently on a nationwide tour, the local showing was sponsored by the State Department of Public Instruction, North Carolina Motor Carriers Association and the American Trucking Associations, Inc.

Other planks of the Keyserling platform include: "Non-inflationary" wage increases. Average weekly earnings of production workers in manufacturing industries should advance from about $71.50 to $100.

Social Security should be expanded so that by 1960 the average basic retirement incomes of elderly people should be 4 to 5 times the current average level.

There is much more to the program along the same lines. Mr. Keyserling and his associates hold out the rosy promise that by the end of 1960 "we can achieve the virtual liquidation of poverty in the United States."

This is explained as follows: "In 1950, 57 per cent of all American families had incomes of less than $4,000 a year. There were 39 per cent below $3,000 and 23 per cent below $2,000. To bring all of these families up to a $4,000 standard of living would absorb less than half of the total increase in personal incomes that we can register by 1960, thus leaving ample room for income improvement among other families."

This program is directly opposite to the basic Eisenhower program... which is to eliminate government competition with private industry and to return as many functions of the federal government to the states as is practicable.

The Eisenhower program is basic Americanism—the system that developed this great nation. Government spending and New Deal planning failed in the past—and there is no reason to believe that Mr. Keyserling's magic wand can be more successful in the future.

By Walter Chamblin, Jr.

In the closing days of Congress the New Dealers outlined their campaign platform for both the November elections and the 1956 Presidential campaign. It was developed after they had failed in an effort to make unemployment an issue and also after failure of trying to accuse the Administration of seeking an Asiatic war.

It can best be described as a diplomatic approach to the unemployment question, as the platform is nothing more than the philosophy that the government, to prevent unemployment, must construct and operate facilities to supplement the output of private industry.

This was the theory in the old Full Employment Bill presented to Congress in 1945. It was rejected and a much modified Employment Act was passed a year later.

Now the new program... as Republicans view it... should give all Republican dissenters reason to pause and take a second breath. It has been drafted by a group of well-known Roosevelt-Truman supporters. Leon H. Keyserling, former Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisors, is staff director.

The program is entitled "Toward Full Employment and Full Production". It holds that a recession started in 1953... and, as a result, the nation's total output is now about $27 billion below what it should be to provide full employment. The program then says:

"We must register year by year a minimum annual growth rate of 4.2 percent in total output to maintain

AMERICA BY 1975

America by 1975 will be using almost 300 million more tons of coal than it did in 1950, according to the Sixteenth Semi-Annual Report of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The National Association of Manufacturers cites this source in pointing out that the nation's coal consumption will be about 815 million tons in 1975. This compares with 522 million tons in 1950. The increase will develop complementary to similar increases in use of petroleum and natural gas.

Increased research into the chemical uses of coal will aid this expected increase. Coal chemistry already has released components for aspirin, cortisone, dyes and textiles, DDT, livestock feed, lucite and other plastics, and many more products.
