TEXT: "Paraded pride is the greatest greed." —Eff Thomas

A small-town lawyer who pretended to be important went around with his head held high and a look of superiority on his face.

"Charlie," he asked the court-house attendant, "why do you walk around with your head down? You should stand straight and proud like I do!"

"Lawyer Jones," said Charlie, "in the wheat fields some plants stand up straight while others bend real low."

"I know that," snapped the lawyer.

"Well," observed Charlie, "the wheat that stands too straight ain't got any grain on it."

There are two kinds of pride.

One is the quiet pride of the strong personality. He knows his abilities and doesn't need to flaunt himself.

The other kind of pride is paraded pride, a greedy, selfish thief. It steals man's finest traits. Paraded pride is not gracious, it only condescends. It has no kindness, it only grants favors. It has no love, but demands adoration. It is not strong, it is easily hurt. It cannot forgive, it must seek revenge.

Many of us possess both kinds of pride. We are despised for our paraded pride. We are respected for our quiet pride. Would you be despised or respected?

It is only persons of firmness that can have real gentleness.

—Roche foucauld

HE HAS TOO MUCH MONEY—G. E. P. Alsem, of Amsterdam, Holland, has monetary troubles—an abundance of money of all different kinds. Alsem, an airlines flight engineer, sometimes has to carry 25 varieties of money from all over the world. The Dutchman, whose globe-trotting has extended over 27 years and 27,000 flying hours, often finds making change a difficult chore.

NO COMMENT

By JAMES W. DOUTHAT

Washington—There is no question but that both major political parties would like to give the voters definite assurance before the November election that there will be an income tax reduction approved by Congress early in the next session.

Tax cuts—which enable the voters to spend more of their own money as they see fit—are regarded as having extraordinary political allure. So the politicians generally can be counted upon to support them when they are at all possible.

The biggest question now facing the politicians—both Republicans and Democrats—is this: Where is the money coming from?

A surplus of only $700 million is forecast for the current fiscal year ending next June 30—and Secretary of the Treasury Humphrey believes that a surplus of $3 or $4 billion must be in sight before serious consideration can be given to tax cutting. Therefore, to meet Mr. Humphrey's requirements, the government's income must be greater than expected—or the government must spend less than expected—or there must be a combination of the two.

What happens along these lines will depend on the degree of business prosperity—which largely determines the amount of taxes paid—and the seriousness of economy efforts by the administration and by Congress.

At any rate—regardless of what is finally decided—all signs indicate that at the next session of Congress there will be prolonged discussion of personal income tax reduction and of corporation tax relief, particularly for small business.

Both the Democrats and Republicans are committed—in their platforms and otherwise—to early action toward reducing personal income taxes and granting small business additional tax relief.

But there is no assurance when this will be done. It is recalled that many congressional tax experts contended last January that neither party could afford to get into the current political campaign without reducing taxes.

But what happened? No serious move was made in the direction of tax reduction and both parties went along with the administration in using the $1.75 billion surplus (as of June 30) for reducing the national debt. In fact, there wasn't even any serious talk about tax
