KNOW YOUR SOCIAL SECURITY

P. E. Bestendorf, representative of the Social Security Administration, is in Edenton every Thursday at the North Carolina Employment Security Commission in Citizens Bank Building.

The recent changes in the Social Security Law regarding disability benefits and benefits for women at age 62 has been well publicized. Few people realize there is a major change affecting farm coverage and migrant labor. The law now defines who the responsible party is for reporting social security on agricultural labor and keeping necessary records. Before social security can be reported or deducted on any farm worker or crew worker he must meet one of two tests. He must earn $150 or more in a calendar year for cash wages figured on a time basis (such as hour, day or week).
Mr. Farmer, you are responsible for keeping accurate records and reporting on all of your employees who meet either of the above tests. There is one exception. If you employ temporary farm labor through a crew leader you are responsible for these workers only if you have a written agreement with the crew leader making himself and the crew workers your employees.

WASHINGTON REPORT

The South has come a long way in a short while in its critical battle for moderation in the bitter civil rights controversy in Congress. Just a month or two ago it looked as if a drastic civil rights bill—a bill that would bring on more problems than it would solve—would be ramrodded through Congress and shoved down the South's throat.
The original civil rights bill that came to the Senate was a vicious bill and an unfair bill. Time and study on the part of senators from states that wouldn't be affected much one way or the other has proven this, because they have seen the inherent dangers in the original bill and voted with southern senators to make the bill more realistic.
From the beginning, the bill that was sent to Congress by the President has been advertised as a "right-to-vote" bill. But it has been a difficult job under difficult circumstances to show that the original version of the civil rights bill was far more than a voting bill. It was a bill that gave such sweeping powers to the attorney general that it was frightening to anyone who took the time to think through the thing.
It is very apparent now that those who concocted the original bill were definitely planning to bring unbearable pressure on the South at the discretion of the attorney general. Then, while they held such a devastating bill in their hands, they talked about it as a "mere" voting bill.
This was not fair. It was not proper. It was the worst sort of deception, and it has caught up with those who engineered it. The heavy chain that was being forged to beat the South is now hanging around the necks of those who seem to think they are charged with the responsibility of telling other people how to run their affairs.
I am confident that when the Senate finishes analyzing and studying the bill—which it is doing section by section—the South will not find the bill one-tenth as undesirable as its original draft.
And in the process, the South will have once again shown that the South in itself is the place where the South's problems will have to be solved. Neither the North, the East nor the West can solve the problems in the South.
Fortunately, more and more people are realizing this in all sections of the Nation. And, also fortunately, more and more members of Congress are realizing it, too.
None are more hopelessly enslaved than those who falsely believe they are free. —Goethe.
