Insured Pension Plans Benefit Older Workers

Life insurance companies writing pension plans report that material progress has been made in recent years in bringing insured pension programs into a position of protecting the job opportunities of older workers, says the Institute of Life Insurance.

The most effective pension plan, according to pension experts in the business, is one which provides, among other features, a continuation of the pension rights, even though the worker leaves the employ of the firm, and one which does not involve unduly larger annual premiums for the older worker. This feature, known as vesting, prevents the older worker from being tied to his job because of his pension credits and enables him to be re-employed without the employer assuming extra pension obligations.

Not a Real Factor
As a recent United States Department of Labor survey report indicated, there is actually no warrant for an employer citing the existence of a pension plan as a barrier to the employment of an older applicant. It was pointed out in that report, however, that many employers used it as an "excuse."

The Institute points out that, through intensified efforts to have employers incorporate vesting provisions, most insured pension plans of the group annuity type now include such provisions. It is reported that these insured pension plans include vesting provisions in a much higher percentage of cases than is true of any other type of pension plan.

Helpful Provisions
"Particularly helpful to the older job-seeker is another provision, which either reduces the pension amount to a level that the average premium will buy, or, where too few years are left to establish any material pension, permits the hiring of the older worker without enrolling him under the pension plan," the Institute says. "More and more insured pension plans are using these features, which completely eliminate any pension relationship of the age factor in hiring."

"The life insurance companies have made a definite advance in fitting the older worker into the pension picture. Although the limitation of time will cause his pension allowance to be small, his main concern is still steady and rewarding employment. Also, steady employment in his later years is important in maintaining his highest level of Social Security credits."

A growing number of pension plans in recent years have been industrywide and thus give a material mobility to workers in those industries. This has given rise to some consideration of the possibility of the creation of pension "pools" whereby workers in particular industries or geographical areas could transfer jobs and still remain in the same pension plan.

NAAS NOTES

By CONNIE ATHERTON

Hello once again—
Not very much in the way of news this week, but I will try and let you in on a few of the local happenings.

First of all, there have been two recent showers. One for Jane Steele and Peggy Kittler, hostesses were Veneta Muller and Barbara Bagwell, and one for Ann Bethel, where hostesses were Barbara Emberton, Marge Roth and Irene Jordan.

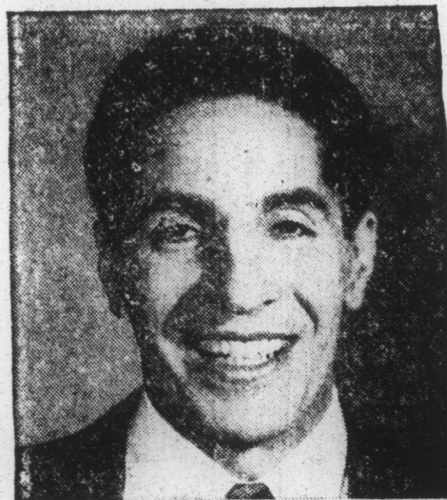

Now for the results of French Night. It was, as they say in the theatrical world a "smash hit". It was enjoyed by everyone. The door prize was won by Joe Conger, Jr. It was truly the biggest and best party the "O" Club has ever had. We would like to express our thanks to the many people who lent us a helping hand in making French Night a huge success.

Many thanks to: Ralph Parrish, who furnished the cardboard for the windmill; Spec Jones for the peanuts; Jim Earnhardt for the theatre material; Hector Lupton for the invitations; Capt. Metz for the building material for the MABS French Cafe; Lt. Trettis, Lt. Noble, and their work crew for the trees; Col. Boag, Maj.

Dauphine and Lt. and Mrs. Skehan for their cameras; Mrs. Koehler for the picture folders; Col. Free for his sleight of hands; Col. Boag, Capt. Byers, Maj. Ross, and Col. Feldmeier for their work on the furniture moving crew; Barbara Bagwell for the directing of the floor show, and also the choreography of the Can-Can; to Maj. Davis and Juanita Free for their piano accompaniment; to Jan Pierce, Barbara Emberton, Jean Leaverton, Connie Atherton, Maj. Zane and the Schusters for their specialty numbers; and the show stopping Can-Can girls: Connie Atherton, Nell Havill, Kay Gillis, Felecia Holdridge, Veneta Muller, and Jan Pierce. And last, but by no means least, we want to thank Mrs. Feldmeier. We owe the success of the evening to her help and encouragement in all departments. Once again many thanks to all.

Phil Rizzuto salutes the Newspaperboy!

Phil Rizzuto, "heart of the Yankees" from 1941 to 1955, played in 52 World Series games, more than any other player, was elected the American League's most valuable player in 1950, is very active in youth work in his home town, Hillside, New Jersey.

"I'll certainly add my cheers," says Phil Rizzuto, "to those for the newspaperboy on Newspaperboy Day."

"These youngsters want to learn to earn their own way. They're developing qualities of loyalty, perseverance and faithfulness to duty. And they're already demonstrating foresight and thrift. Many of them are planning ahead for college educations or independent lives in business for themselves by investing in U. S. Savings Bonds and Stamps."

The Treasury Department joins Phil Rizzuto in saluting the newspaperboys. These young men have distributed over 40 million pieces of information about U. S. Savings Bonds. And thousands of them are investing in Savings Bonds and Stamps—helping to insure America's future and theirs.

Savings Bonds are one of the wisest investments any of us can make. They pay 3 1/2% interest when held to maturity, cannot be lost, stolen or destroyed and are as safe as the rock-hard faith of millions of Americans.
