

WASHINGTON REPORT

Raleigh—Events during the past two weeks have brought into dramatic focus the crisis and challenge facing the nations and peoples of the free world.

Russia, much like a temperamental bull in close quarters, is taking reckless advantage of the startling missile and outer space victories she has won by bringing undue pressure on NATO countries. As the NATO meeting in Paris opened, strong notes were sent to most member nations citing the horrors of missile warfare and the danger all Europe would be exposing itself to by permitting the establishment of U. S. rocket bases there.

These latest Russian moves make President Eisenhower's role at the NATO meeting even more difficult and frustrating. The failure of the Vanguard satellite launching was humiliating in itself, but to this and other blows to American prestige in missile and satellite development, Russia is adding thinly veiled threats of war.

When all these factors are added up, not to mention the internal troubles NATO faces, we in the United States find ourselves in a very serious position.

Ironical as it is, we need closer ties with other nations at a time when it is most difficult for them to be friendly with us. Many of them have the notion communism isn't so bad after all. They feel—and rightly so—that Russia isn't the big boob we have at times tried to picture her.

Too, with the recent Russian victories in missile advancements, we can no longer use "military supremacy" as an argument to convince NATO countries that we hold an advantage over Russia.

More than at any time in history, the free nations of the world are "in it together" in halting the advances of communism.

This is the main reason that our ties with European nations must be welded closer together—militarily, economically and politically. It will probably mean additional sacrifices for us, but it would be a grave mistake to think there is any cheap way to beat communism.

There is no doubt that President Eisenhower is considering all of these and many other factors in his recommendations and negotiations at Paris. It is too early to measure the effects of the conference, but it could well be the most important assignment in the President's career.

He, like the entire Nation, has to beat a path as he goes.

weathering, the lime content of our soils has been reduced to low levels. Also, lime helps counteract an excessive amount of acid in some North Carolina soil.

Question: How should I go about thinning a thick stand of pine trees?

Answer: Select and mark trees before you cut. Remove diseased and insect-damaged trees first. Then knock out trees which are forked in the first 33 feet of length from the ground, trees with long, sweeping, curved trunks and trees with extremely short green tops. In addition, it's often necessary to take out a few higher-quality trees if they're too close together.

Question: Where is the best place to locate a poultry house?

Answer: Locate poultry houses near the top of a southern or southeastern slope if possible. It's extremely important that poultry houses have good air and water drainage. Location should allow an abundance of controlled fresh air.

for a while, so that he could really be united with men. And, when he became man, he chose servitude, subjection and humiliation. While he could have revealed himself as a king at any time, calling for legions of angels to enforce his rule, he, instead, remained a servant to all, so that we might see his love along with his power. He became obedient to the will of God the Father, even to dying as a sin offering.

Christ's sacrifice on the cross for us is important for us to remember at Christmas, for it was Christ's goal when he came to earth. He gave up the glories which were his to become a man, fully knowing the consequences. John gives us the reason for Christ's sacrifice, when he declared, in John 3:16, that it was because God loved the world (his creation, man) so much, that he was willing to give his only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And, to demonstrate this love, Jesus was willing to do the will of his Father by becoming the sacrifice for sin, so that man might be saved from the punishment of his sin.

This was God's Christmas gift to us. We, who at this time of the year are so busy and so concerned with gifts for our loved ones and friends, often fail to become still and quiet enough to ponder on the wonderful gift which a loving God has become still and quiet enough to ponder on the wonderful gift which a loving God has given to us. Millions of dollars will be spent during the Christmas season—some of it with loving hearts and some of it spent because of a feeling of compulsion, to give to someone because that someone gives something to us. Only the gift given out of a heart of love is the gift worth giving.

Christ came into the world to assure us of God's love for us and to atone for our sins so that we would, be fit to associate with God. The only condition was that we should accept God as the ruler of our lives.

"The Christ Child stands at the threshold of the door leading to the heart of our world, to your heart and to mine. Shall we pretend to be busy in our upholstered indifference, turning His arrival over to the maid with a mechanical, 'Ask Him what he wants?' Or isn't it time we dropped from foam-rubber cushions to our knees on the hard floor of humility and in prayer implored that He enter the room of our hearts not only with His comfort but also with His cleansing power? Isn't it about time?"—Harrison Davis, in The Pillpit.

Question: What effect on North Carolina agriculture does our system of tenant farming have?

Answer: The effect is widespread, but generally the lack of long-term agreements between landlord and tenant inhibits mechanization, livestock production and the adoption of other practices and improvements that normally take longer than one year to show results.

Question: Will it pay me to hold my soybeans off the market until after the normal marketing season?

Answer: Probably, yes. As with small grains, the price of soybeans tends to be less at harvest time, especially when there's a bumper crop. A price-rise in soybeans is expected soon after the first of the year.

Question: Can aromatic tobacco be a successful second crop?

Answer: Yes. If your soil is suited to the production of this crop, it can be made to pay about as well as flue-cured tobacco. But it takes a lot of work and you must follow the latest improved practices. A Waynesville farmer (with lots of help) harvested 8,873 pounds from nine acres which averaged $93.76 per hundred pounds, for a total of $8,318.87.

Question: Will egg prices continue to climb the rest of the year?

Answer: Probably not. Egg production in September dropped below the corresponding period of 1956 for the first time this year. Some market experts believe egg production has passed its seasonal low for 1957. If this is true, prices may be passed their high point for 1957. The 60 cents per dozen quotations in the second and third weeks of October may be regarded as the top price of the year. However, the seasonal decline in egg prices will be less this year than usual. The number of laying hens on American farms is lower than usual in relation to the number of people who
