

Rotary Conference In Burlington Over Coming Week - end

Rotarians from the 38 clubs in District 771 of Rotary International will gather in Burlington next week-end for a two-day conference. The meeting will begin Sunday, February 2 and will continue through Monday night, February 3rd. Representing the international organization at the meeting will be Maurice J. Wild of Port Elizabeth, Union of South Africa, second vice president of Rotary International. Wild will be the featured speaker on Monday night. Sunday night, a fellowship will be held, with Jennings Randolph, vice president of Capital Airlines, as guest speaker. He is to be introduced by Edwin Lanier, state senator from Chapel Hill. At a Monday luncheon, a program of music will be furnished by students from Meredith College in Raleigh. The Governor's banquet on Monday night, with Wild as speaker will conclude the program.

C. Gordon Maddrey of Ahsokie is governor of the district this year. His wife will give a tea for visiting women coming to Burlington, at the Elks Club on East Webb Avenue from 4:30 to 5:00 P. M., on Monday, February 3. Wives of former district governors will receive at this tea. Expected to attend the tea Monday is Mrs. Luther Hodges wife of North Carolina's Governor. A new district governor is to be elected at the meeting, and at this time the only known candidate for this office is Burlington's Hobart Steele, a Rotarian for some 20 years.

Rising Longevity Huge Impact On Economic Value Of A Man

Spectacular achievements in the fields of health and longevity, dramatized by the steady increase in the average length of live over the years, are having a profound economic as well as social influence on the American economy, according to data compiled by the U. S. Department of Labor. The figures show that the average male child born in the United States in recent years not only has the prospect of a substantially longer life than his counterpart a generation ago along with a longer adolescent-educational period and more years to enjoy retirement. Increased longevity also provides a much longer working life than ever before. Individual and Society Benefit As far as the individual and the economy in general are concerned, two major results of a longer working life are— It greatly increases the economic value of a man. This has already shown a big rise, thanks to the economy growth and prosperity of recent years, and is certain to increase in the future. Right now the average man starting out to earn his living has a prospective lifetime income in the neighborhood of $200,000, based on current conditions of employment, income and survival rates and their projection into the future. Then, too, a longer working life is giving the country a powerful ally to help cope with the manpower and production problems that have accompanied our dynamic economic growth and rising living standards over recent years. A Historic Increase The Labor Department figures show that the life expectancy of a male child at birth was up to tending the average man's working life. The figures show that the work life expectancy of a male child at birth in 1955 was up to a new high of 42 years. While little changed from 1950, this figure was 3.7 years greater than in 1940, a rise of almost a tenth in a decade and a half. It was practically 10 years, or nearly a third, higher than it was in 1900. The figures indicate even greater gains for women, who have become a steadily increasing force in the working population. Bureau of the Census figures indicate that the prospective lifetime income of the average man figured out at $133,000 in 1949; projected on the basis of employment and other conditions existing at that time. Since then, the average annual money income of a man has gone up more than 50 per cent, according to the latest Census figures, thus bringing the total prospective earnings of an average man up to the $200,000 level. Education boosts this average lifetime earning power greatly. With a man's worth to his family and to society so much greater today than ever before, more individual and family protection is a natural development. This has manifested itself in record ownership of life insurance, with about $450 billions now in force, and in the big growth in other savings and in pension and retirement plans. Besides, retirement these days is marked by increasing security and financial independence through the widespread ownership of life insurance, pension and retirement benefits, and other savings. The average youth under the conditions of a generation or two ago had nothing even remotely approaching such opportunities and prospects. Impact on Production However, the greater part of the increase in longevity over recent decades has gone into raising the over all potential production of the population through ex-

Edenton Lions Club Holds Short Meeting

Edenton Lions adjourned somewhat earlier than usual Monday night in order to allow members to attend the Chamber of Commerce meeting in the Court House at 8 o'clock. During the meeting Secretary W. J. Taylor commented upon the various committees of the club and stated that their reports could be very helpful to the club. L. H. Haskett also made an appeal for better attendance. Visitors at the meeting were Dr. William Wynn and D. T. Harmond, Jr., of the Powellsville Lions Club.

Edenton Jayvees Trample Ahsokie

By BILL GOODWIN Edenton's Jayvee basketball team ran off with a 23-14 victory over Ahsokie in a game played at Ahsokie last Tuesday. It took half of the ball game for the Aces to see the light. They led 7-6 at the half, but from there they went on to build up a 13-7 third quarter lead over the seemingly inexperienced Indians five. Billy Dail and Jerry Tolley led Edenton with 6 points each. Johnny Phillips had 5, Ronnie Bass 4 and Bubba Hopkins and Bobby Stokely got one complete string of Edenton reserves At one point in the game a com- were in the ball game.
