

By ROBERT E. LEE (For the N. C. Bar Association) Hospitals

Susie Smith was a paying pa tient in a hospital operated by a non-profit corporation. Due to the negligence of employees of the hospital she was seriously and permanently injured. May she recover damages from the corporation?

No. A non-profit or charitable institution is not liable for the wrongful and negligent acts of its employees. Susie Smith will be unable to recover from the hospital damages for her personal injuries.

It has been said that this exemption from liability on the part of charitable institutions rests upon grounds of public policy or upon the theory that the property of a charity is a trust fund and that the charitable objects should not be hampered by the wrongful acts of those chosen to carry them out.

The fact that Susie Smith was a paying patient is immaterial Although the hospital made a profit on Susie Smith, it was not a private profit. The profit made on Susie Smith was used by the charitable institution to care for the non-paying patients.

This rule of immunity from liability for personal injuries applies not only to hospitals, but to a wide variety of charitable institutions, such as schools, colleges, orphanages and churches.

The only occasion in North Carolina where a charitable institution can be held for the negligent acts of its employees is when there is proof that it has not exercised reasonable care in their selection and retention.

Would Susie Smith be able to recover damages from the employee of the hospital who negligently injured her?

Yes. Although the corporation that operates the hospital is not liable, the individual or employee who caused the injury may be held responsible for damages.

If the individual does not have property from which a judgment can be satisfied, there would be little use in bringing such a suit.

Would Susie Smith be able to recover damages from a hospital not operated by a charitable institution?

Yes. Where the profits of the hospital, if any, are to inure to the benefit of private individuals, as stockholders or otherwise, the hospital is liable to patients for injuries resulting from the negligence of its nurses and other employees.

A hospital, charitable or private, is not liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of its nurses and other employees.

A hospital, charitable or privite, is not liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of a physician that has been employed by the patient or someone other than the hospital. The reason is that their professional treatment is not subject to the control or direction by the administrative officers or employees of the hospital. The patient's remedy is to sue the physician.
