

WITH THE FARM WOMEN

By VIRGINIA M. NANCE, Extension Home Economics Editor

It's a natural thing for people to pass on bits of useful information and hints to friend, and that's just what home demonstration club women in NEW HANOVER County have been doing, says Verna Belle Lowery, home agent. Mrs. J. P. McGinnis, a club member, expressed it this way, "As far back as I can remember I've been sewing. But the simple sewing tricks I've learned recently at club meetings have helped me make garments more professional looking. Most of what I learned, I've passed on to another seamstress friend." . . . 4-H'ers in RANDOLPH County have really been baking lots of corn meal muffins, as part of their activity in the Corn Meal Muffin program. Reports from Ida Maude Black, assistant home agent, show that at least one adult 4-H leader has worked with 21 girls in making their muffins. Prizes were offered by the leader as incentive for the girls to make a higher quality product . . . The Leon Thomas family, in JONES County, has a problem which seems to be prevalent in landscaping, says Home Agent Faytie Cox. It seems that when they began to set out shrubbery around their home, the plants were small and set too close together. Now, several years later, the plants are quite large and are marring the looks of the home and the shrubbery with their closeness. As a result, the Thomas's are making plans to re-distribute the plants, using the excess ones around a new addition to their home . . . Conservancy food has kept RICHMOND County women unusually busy this summer, say reports from Frances Temple, home agent. She indicates that gardens are better this year and with the high cost of food, the women have been anxious to conserve what they have. Miss Temple observes that "Richmond County people" will certainly be well fed this winter. . . . Mrs. Willie McDonald, Catawba, Rt. 2, didn't have to wait for painters to redecorate her home. She decided to do it herself. Home Agent Marjorie Gilbert explained that Mrs. McDonald came to her for help in planning her son's room. To save money, her plans were to do all the painting herself—which she did, and with good results.

SENATOR SAM ERVIN SAYS

Washington — The Senate Rackets Committee under the Chairmanship of Senator McClellan has continued hearings in the labor-management field since the adjournment of Congress.

Hearings To Continue

The committee has much work to be done. It is now planned to hold hearings regularly during the coming months.

We can accomplish this by alternating attendance at the hearings. Under our procedure we require at least two Senators present when the committee is in session. Prior to formulating my plans for the period between now and the next session of Congress which convenes on January 7, 1959, I agreed to be available for a considerable part of the time to attend the hearings in Washington during November and De-

ABUNDANT LIFE

by ORAL ROBERTS

AN EAGLE SETS HIS WINGS

Two little girls were gathering roses. One of them ran into the house crying. "Mother," she said, "every rose I have gathered has stuck me with its thorns."

The other laughed gaily and said, "Mother, all my thorns have roses!"

What would you have seen—roses or thorns? Some people are sicker than others because of their melancholy outlook on life. They see the bad side of life because they practice wrong thinking and wrong believing.

It is the people who resist self-pity, who refuse to feel sorry for themselves, who will not allow themselves to cringe and whimper about life's struggle who know what living really is. They are the ones who can stand up and say, "I love God, I have faith in God. I believe God is with me, and if he is with me, nothing or no one can successfully be against me. I will succeed, in his name."

I learn a wonderful lesson from the eagle. When a storm strikes an eagle, he sets his wings in such a way that the winds lift him above the storm by their very fury. The set of the wings does it. And it is the right use of our faith that determines how the storms that come our way will treat us. We will rise above the storm; its very fury will send us higher and higher toward God—or it will wreck us for time and eternity. Faith makes the difference.

A young man out of college asked his father, "Dad," do you still believe there is a God?"

"Yes, son."

"Well, if there is a God, where is he?"

The father smiled and asked, "Son, where is he not?"

God is present everywhere at the same time. He is like the sun when it is shining. You may close your eyes but the sun shines right on—whether you look toward it or not. You do not have to go anywhere to find God, for he is here and he is there. I find him here through my faith. You will find him there through your faith.

You can find him today. Let me emphasize that faith in God is the greatest single possession you will ever have in this world. There are people who think if they had lots of money, they would have everything.

In my city there is a very rich woman who was afflicted with an incurable disease. One day her doctor came in and asked her, "Well, how are you today?"

She said, "About the same, doctor, and how are you?"

He said, "Lady, there is nothing wrong with me that a million dollars and how are you?"

She said, "Doctor, I have a million dollars and you can't cure me."

In this world money is necessary and God has promised to supply our needs—all of them—according to his riches by Christ Jesus. But the most important thing in this world and in eternity is to have faith, faith in God.

Schedule

After my first vacation since coming to the Senate in 1954, I plan to do what I can in the campaign during the month of October. That will give me considerable time for my turn on the committee in the two remaining months. While I prefer to spend all of the recess in North Carolina, I do feel that the work of the committee is of such importance that personal preference must be sidelined in favor of the work at hand.

Full-Time Job

Senator McClellan and I are the only Senators assigned to as many as three regular committees and a special committee that functions as regularly as the select committee, the so-called Senate Rackets Committee. As I have previously reported, my other committee assignments are Judiciary, Armed Services and Government Operations. The Senate Rackets Committee is a full-time job. I am convinced that it has made a significant contribution.

But the fight over this legislation was the principal bar to planned Congressional adjournment only two days distant and so, rather than prolong the session, a bare majority voted for recommitment and thereby postponed a final decision until next year.

Incidentally, the filibusters centered their remarks around a highly volatile proposal for the Senate to go on record in favor of Supreme Court anti-segregation decisions. This tended to create an atmosphere making it difficult to consider the states

No Comment

"NO COMMENT" is a report of incidents on the national scene, and does not necessarily reflect NAM policy or position.

Washington—The closeness of the vote by which the Senate killed states rights legislation served to stimulate its advocates to launch immediately an intensified campaign for favorable action by the next Congress.

Because it was brought up so close to the time of adjournment the measure, to protect state laws against federal preemption, never had an opportunity for considerarights proposal objectively.

The legislation had passed the House by the overwhelming vote of 241 to 155. Its chief sponsor was Rep. Smith (D-Va.), chairman of the House Rules Committee. A similar measure, sponsored by Senator McClellan (D-Ark.) and others, was before the Senate. Its sponsors included both Democrats and Republicans.

Under the measure, the Supreme Court would be barred from invalidating state laws merely because Congress had passed legislation covering the same area. Federal law would be supreme if there was a direct conflict with state law—or if Congress specifically "preempted" the field—but, in the absence of these conditions, the Supreme Court would have no right to assume that a federal law on a subject automatically nullified a state law on the same subject.

Backers of the legislation contended that the Supreme Court had made this assumption in a number of cases—and thereby had deprived the states of the right to deal with local problems, such as communistic activity.

Senator McClellan, chairman of the Senate Rackets Investigating Committee, led the drive for approval of the measure. He was ably supported by a number of his colleagues from both sides of the aisles.

Actually, many of the backers were surprised that the measure received as much support as it did considering the circumstances under which it was considered.

This surprising amount of strength encouraged them to look forward to—and to plan for—the next session of Congress convening on January 7.

They firmly believe that the legislation is among the most important—if not the most important—considered by Congress and its enactment is essential to preserve local government and protect the people against the evils of a giant bureaucracy in Washington.

Bad Prospects

Bridegroom—You are my all in life.

Bride—Yes, I don't own anything outside of you, either.
