

Educational Trend Is Significant To Economy Growth

Close Correlation Is Seen Between Educational Attainment And Income

The U. S. Bureau of the Census has taken a long look ahead at the educational attainment of the population in the next two decades, and has come up with conclusions that are of far-reaching significance to the American economy and to its progress in the years to come.

Outstanding in the Census Bureau's projects are:

The number of high school graduates will increase by around 45 million, or close to 85 per cent in the next 20 years. In 1980, this group is expected to add up to more than 95 million, the equivalent of well over half of the population 15 years old and over in that year, as against somewhat over 40 per cent currently and little more than a third of this age group back in 1950.

The College Trend

The number of college graduates will show a rate of growth almost as great in the next two decades. In 1980, the group which will have completed four or more years of college is expected to total 15 million, about 7 million more than now and the equivalent of 10 per cent of the population 20 years old and over in that year. Currently the number of college graduates is equal to approximately 7 per cent of the 20 and over population group while in 1950 the proportion was only 6 per cent.

The educational attainment of the population has been thrown into sharp focus in the last few years by a number of developments on the international and domestic fronts. The rapid growth of industrialization and the increasing complexity of technology are of prime importance in this respect with their increasing emphasis on skill and know-how. Accentuating this is the increasing pace of research and development in business and industry with its need for scientific manpower, and the challenge of the space age in missiles and rocketry.

Thus the intensive education and training of our manpower sources is a primary requirement for the nation's future progress and security.

Working Population Shift

Evidence of the trend is already apparent in the changing shape of the working population and particularly in the fact that the classification of professional, technical and kindred workers has outpaced all other groups in rate of growth in the last few years. Greater than average growth also has been shown by the classification of non-farm managers, officials and proprietors, the group containing the administrative brains on which the effective functioning of our complex economy depends.

Of added importance to the economy is that these two groups are at the top of the income scale in the Census Bureau's classification of earning power by occupational groups. The figures likewise show a close correlation between educational attainment and income. The average college graduate can anticipate a life-time income three-fifths greater than the typical high school graduate, while the latter on the average has a life-time income expectancy almost half again as great as one whose education stopped with elementary school.

Mr. And Mrs. L. W. Belch Honored On 50th Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Luther W. Belch of the Center Hill Community celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary Tuesday, March 3. Mr. and Mrs. Belch were honored by their children at a golden anniversary dinner held at the Edenton Restaurant when over 20 members of the family were on hand.

Mr. Belch, now a retired merchant and farmer, is a veteran of the Spanish-American War. Mr. and Mrs. Belch were the first couple to be married in the Center Hill Baptist Church, where they have been active members for many years.

Their children are Mrs. N. J. George and G. Medlin Belch of Edenton, Elliott Belch of Tyner and William M. Belch of Newport News, Va.

Local Piano Students Win High Honors

Mrs. C. B. Mooney, teacher of piano at the Edenton Junior-Senior High School, was very much elated Tuesday of last week when she accompanied three students to the district music contest festival held at East Carolina College at Greenville. Of the three students, one was awarded a superior rating and two were rated excellent.

Roger Lamb was awarded a superior rating in the junior piano event and Bud Skiles and Brenda Mooney were awarded a rating of excellent in the senior piano contest.

Among the participating schools were Greenville, Wilson, Rocky Mount, New Bern and Kinston, so that Mrs. Mooney was delighted with the showing of the local students in opposition to larger schools.

Center Hill Plans Progress Projects

Approximately 50 people of the Center Hill community met Friday night at the community building for a combined supper and community progress meeting. C. W. Overman, County Agent, was a guest and offered a prayer of thanks before the meal. A covered dish supper was enjoyed by those present and the tables were loaded with a bountiful supply of delicious foods of many varieties.

The purpose of this meeting was to select projects and committees which will be the backbone of Center Hill's improvement in the community progress contest sponsored by the Agricultural Workers and Peoples Bank & Trust Company.

J. Edgar Hoover of the F. B. I.

On New Year's day in 1895, the child who was to become America's foremost fighter against crime, was born in the very shadow of the nation's Capitol.

Christened John Edgar, he was to become the feared enemy of all criminals, famous throughout the world as J. Edgar Hoover of the F. B. I.

Although Mr. Hoover's exploits have long been well known, only now, for the first time, has there appeared in book form a biography of America's Number One G-Man. Written by Mildred Houghton Comfort, and published by T. S. Denison & Company of Minneapolis, it is aptly titled: "J. Edgar Hoover, Modern Knight Errant."

The book describes not merely the hitherto little known factors that shaped Mr. Hoover's life, but his fight to modernize the F. B. I. and make it an incorruptible and vigorous organization.

Miss Comfort's book is not history in any dry sense, however. It is alive with anecdotes. There is, for example, the story of Alvin Karpis, once the country's No. 1 Public Enemy, who had sworn to kill J. Edgar Hoover.

Meeting the challenge, the F. B. I. chief personally directed the gangster's capture. When Karpis was traced to a New Orleans hideout, the stage was set for a memorable moment in criminal annals. It was the scene of Karpis' walking out of the trap set for him, and coming face to face with J. Edgar Hoover himself. As Mr. Hoover reached for him, Karpis grew suddenly pale, his bold threats faded. Without a word, he gave up meekly to the man he had sworn to kill.

While rooting out kidnapers, counterfeiters, spies and saboteurs, Mr. Hoover has not neglected a program to prevent future crime by emphasizing proper upbringing of the nation's youth. Advocating healthy family life, he says: "Youngsters who have love, understanding, and adequate discipline in a poverty-ridden home are far less 'underprivileged' than those who may be surrounded by material wealth but who lack affection, understanding and discipline."

In "J. Edgar Hoover, Modern Knight Errant," Miss Comfort describes in the most graphic terms how his own upright family life produced in the head of the F. B. I. a model for American youth, and an outstanding citizen and fighter against crime.

neglected a program to prevent future crime by emphasizing proper upbringing of the nation's youth. Advocating healthy family life, he says: "Youngsters who have love, understanding, and adequate discipline in a poverty-ridden home are far less 'underprivileged' than those who may be surrounded by material wealth but who lack affection, understanding and discipline."
