Since the last election there has been considerable said and written about runaway inflation, deficit spending and budget balancing. Some say we are facing bigger problems than we can settle with this inflation, others comment that such talk is pure "hot air" that this country is rich and we are strong. What is the real answer to this problem of inflation and what is it actually?

Dear George:
The answer to your question is very simple on the surface, but the more you go into it the more complex it becomes. Simply, inflation means a distorted blowing up beyond normal; undue expansion, an abnormal swelling. In terms of economics this inflation refers to prices we pay for things we need in everyday living as well as what industry pays for raw materials and labor. Actually it is a see-saw between the value of money and prices. As prices go up the value of your dollar goes down. In a sense it is a lack of confidence in the government issuing the money. In this country we used to be on the gold standard, which meant that any time you did not like the piece of paper you had saying it was redeemable in gold at the rate of five dollars, you could go into a bank (theoretically) and demand five dollars worth of gold. However, we went off the gold standard during the depression, and the only thing we have in back of our currency is our faith in our government. Money is a medium of exchange and has no intrinsic value in itself; it is faith that gives value to our money. It is a loss of faith and the policies of our government that cause or bring about this situation. Deficit spending is spending beyond your budget or income and spending for non-productive goods or services. We have been spending beyond our income for some time for military purposes, farm subsidies, and other social purposes. This has made it necessary for us to borrow and our debt is some two hundred and ninety billion dollars. Conservative people are concerned about this debt and want the government to refrain from spending beyond the estimated income for the fiscal period. Liberals say we are rich and we can stand debt and want to keep on spending, regardless. As a result the U. S. Treasury is finding it more and more difficult to borrow money at low interest rates and has to pay a higher interest rate for each new long term issue. This all sends the cost of government sky high requiring more and more taxes. As a result people begin to lose faith in the value of the currency, especially people who have things to sell and demand more and more for their goods, thus the value of your currency goes down. It is estimated that our present dollar in terms of the 1940 dollar is worth forty cents. Of course, there are those who postulate that the government prints the money, that the government is the people, and when the going gets tough the government could cancel all debt. It is this thinking that makes people concerned about the value of money. In times of inflation, shrewd people invest in things that will hold their value, regardless, such as diamonds and real estate. One only has to study the situation in France to understand what inflation can do. France has been spending for one and sundry social needs great sums of money beyond its ability to collect in taxes and the cost of living has been soaring and the value of the franc has been dropping. People are suffering, especially those on fixed incomes, such as pensions. If you are interested you should do some studying on the subject and then write to your Federal representatives to keep within our income or ability to pay on a cash basis.

fortable and I have a fairly good job; we have two children going to elementary school.

—Tom D. L.
Dear Tom:
Your problem is becoming more and more a serious social problem. Statistics show that more and more women are working and quite a proportion of these women are married and presumably have children. Where there is no economic necessity and there are children, it is the opinion of your counsellor that the wife should stay home and keep house and not go to business. When the children are grown, then it is another question. The home is the center of security, protection, happiness for the children and that should not be destroyed by a Mother going to business. I would insist on it.

SUNLAY SCHOOL LESSON

steadiness? We find our answer in the words, "the Lord was with him." God gave David a strength that enabled him to live victoriously. Can he not also help us maintain poise in the midst of life's trials and tribulations?

Perhaps we may make further discoveries by again looking through a window into the jealous soul of Saul. The account says, "And when Saul saw that he had great success, he stood in awe of him." The word "awe" here carries the meaning of intense fear. Saul stood in dread of David. Saul's sad condition of soul is portrayed in progressive development.

In contrast with Saul's dread was the affection of the people. "All Israel and Judah loved David." David advanced to a still higher position in the minds and hearts of his people, and it was this devotion that finally placed him in a position of responsible leadership. It afforded him opportunities to serve his people such as he had never enjoyed before. Ultimately he was able to use his position of leadership to unify his nation.

Popularity itself is not necessarily good or evil, but what we do with popularity can be either. The gracious person is one who can receive a tribute of praise with proper modesty, neither rebuffing nor offending the man who offers praise, not letting the tribute give him a magnified view of his own importance.
