Edenton Directory Being Distributed

A list of names are the listing of the names of wives, the designation of the heads of households, the designation of occupations and the listing of addresses.

The householders, or green section, in addition to showing locations of streets and who lives or does business at each number, denotes the homes that are owned by the occupants thereof and telephone numbers.

The Numerical Telephone Directory, printed on blue paper, listing the telephone subscribers by numerical progression of telephone numbers, will help to identify an anonymous caller when only the telephone number is given.

One of the most important phases of the new City Directory set-up is that the people in other cities throughout North Carolina and adjoining states and in the larger cities of the U. S. now can refer to the Edenton City Directory. Distribution of the new book to these points is being made at this time, the publishers announced. The service functions through the continent-wide, free-reference out-of-town Directory Library system operated by the members of the Association of North American Directory Publishers.

The National Outlook

The Federal Reserve Moves on Credit

By RALPH ROBEY

Every bank in the nation is required by law to keep a reserve against its deposits. The purpose of this legal provision is to limit the lending power of banks, and it is effective in this regard because most deposits are the result of loans or investments. The amount of the reserve is always stated as a percentage, and varies rather widely. On the average it amounts to about one-sixth of the volume of deposits.

The Federal Reserve System exercises its control over the credit system, and the money supply, by influencing the reserve position of the commercial banks. If it is desired to lessen credit expansion the Federal Reserve takes steps to tighten the reserve position of the commercial banks, if greater credit expansion is desired the reserve position of the commercial banks is eased.

A Gentle Rein

For many months the Reserve authorities have held a mild restraining rein on the lending power of the commercial banks, by keeping these institutions in check to the Reserve Banks by approximately $400 million. This has not been a matter of shutting off credit. It has merely been a policy of keeping credit expansion in reasonable bounds.

How does the Reserve System exercise such control? There are three ways:

First the Reserve Banks may change the discount rate. This is the fee charged commercial banks when they borrow from the Reserve Banks. As the discount rate goes up, so will the rate charged its business customers by commercial banks.

Second is open market operations. This is the buying or selling of U. S. Treasury obligations.

Reason For This Discussion

Why bring up this whole subject now? It is brought up because the Federal Reserve authorities a few days ago issued an order which permitted an estimated $230 million of vault cash to be counted as part of the legal reserve. The net effect of this action is to reduce by that amount the volume of Treasury obligations that otherwise would have had to be purchased to meet the seasonal Christmas demand for cash and credit.

The action does not indicate a basic change in Federal Reserve policy. In other words, there is no basis for assuming that interest rates will fall within the next several months.

Aces Again Tackle Chowan High Cagers

By BILL GOODWIN

The Edenton Aces and the Chowan Bulldogs square off at each other for the first time in three years Thursday night in the local gymnasium. The girls will start the action at 7 o'clock.

The Aces have dropped their first three contests and will be out to break into the win column. Windsor beat the locals 42-41, Washington by a 57-38 score and Elizabeth City by 35-29. Johnny Phillips has paced the Aces' attack, scoring 13.14 schools until after the Christmas and 11 points in each of the three games.

The Bulldogs have compiled a 4-6 won-loss record, but four of the losses were by two and three point margins. Jeff Ward and Edgar Ray Jordan have led the Chowan forces.

The Acelets have made only one appearance, losing to Windsor. Sara Relfe Smith and Mary Anne Overton scored 14 and 12 points respectively in that game.

A Conference guard Norma Blanchard ran into foul trouble against Windsor and was not around to give her usual performance.

The Chowan girls have managed to break even in their ten games. They have lost three games by one-point margins.

The action Thursday night will finish the schedule for both the schools until after the Christmas and 11 points in each of the
